Beirut Battle Spreads, Gov't Sends Jets, Tanks

BEIRUT — Army tanks and air force planes battled Palestinian Arab guerrillas in shell-torn Beirut today and indications mounted that fighting was spreading to other parts of the country.

Two helicopters hovered over the airport apparently directing the two Hawker Hunter jet fighter-bombers.. The jets made more than a half-dozen passes in a 15-minute period.

The target of the strafing appeared to be the Bourj Barajneh refugee camp, jammed with thousands of Palestinian refugees, including women and children. Witnesses said the planes were firing rockets and machine guns.

Tank cannons pounded apartment buildings occupied by guerrillas, machine-gun fire sprayed city streets, guerrilla snipers staged hit-and-run attacks and bazookas were fired from speeding cars.

Explosions and shellfire mingled with the wail of ambulances as President Suleiman Franjieh vowed he would not tolerate a Palestinian "occupation army" in Lebanon. Attempts by leaders of both sides to enforce a ceasefire failed.

One group of guerrillas tried to blow up Beirut's main water reservoir at Dbaye, five miles north of the city, but were chased off by Lebanese armored reinforcements. Some of the guerrillas sought refuge in a nearby Palestinian refugee camp, others occupied a ruined monastry.

Tanks and armored cars circled the area, shelling the camp and the monastery with cannons and mortars. Troops occupied the monastery by mid-afternoon and pursued the guerrillas down the Mediterranean coast.

In southern Lebanon, near the Israeli border, troops opened up on a guerrilla vehicle that tried to run a checkpoint. Four guerrillas were killed, including a regional commander of the Syrian-backed Saika guerrilla group, and Capt. Riad Awad, a senior officer of Al Fathah whom guerrilla leader Yasiv Araft was said to regard as a "kid brother."

Attempts to enforce a shaky ceasefire, negotiated before dawn and announced again at noon, appeared unsuccessful.

A senior police officer, describing one incident, said guerrillas stopped an army truck carrying 10 soldiers, ordered them out at gunpoint and machine-gunned them in a nearby cellar. Three were killed and the other seven seriously wounded, the officer said.

Near the Camille Chamoun stadium tanks shelled a row of apartment houses 12 to 15 storeys high which the guerrillas still held despite heavy shelling Wednesday. The tanks' 105-millimetre cannon blasted huge holes in the walls.

A curfew imposed Wednesday night was lifted for two hours to permit citizens to shop for food and other necessities. It was reimposed at 11 a.m.

Other reports spoke of a "third force," sniping at both the Lebanese army and the guerrillas from rooftops.

In Wednesday's fighting, the defence ministry reported 12 soldiers were killed and 40 wounded.

The fighting broke out Wednesday in a dispute over the arrest two days earlier of eight bomb-carrying guerrillas. The Palestinians then seized two army corporals as hostages for the release of the guerrillas.

The hostages were set free late Wednesday, but the government still holds the guerrillas on charges of carrying prohibited weapons.

$2.5M BOOST IN CITY BUDGET

A marathon session of council's committee of the whole earlier this week made some minor changes which reduced the mill rate estimate for general tax purposes from 47.1 mills to a straight 47, meaning a final increase of three mills over the 1972 rate.

The mill-rate increase will mean a jump of roughly $25 on most home owners' tax bills.

—Social welfare — $5,271,645 ($5,484,793).

—Public health — $515,654 ($476,645).

—Water distribution system — $1,113,285 ($1,037,475).

—Sanitation and waste removal — $1,385,060 ($1,096,610).

—Provincial per capita grant — $1,976,352 ($1,826,910).

—Provincial court fines — $410,000 ($340,000).

—Licences and permits — $436,950 ($417,700).

REFINERY GAS THEFT TRIAL SET

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — Sixteen persons, including a West Vancouver policeman, will appear in court here Friday to answer charges laid in connection with the theft of gasoline from Pacific Petroleum Ltd. refinery at Taylor, 11 miles south of here.

Prosecutor Brian Harrison said it was impossible to determine exact quantities involved. Initial reports put the amount at between three million and seven million gallons, worth at least $1 million.

He said the Crown will allege a conspiracy to steal petroleum by tampering with measuring apparatus at the refinery.

Fredericton Drier

FREDERICTON (CP) — Some local streets dried up Wednesday night as high water began receding for the first time since flooding hit during the weekend.

Trend Reversed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices of food and farm products declined in April for the first time in six months but the drop was more than offset by the biggest jump in industrial prices in 22 years, the United States government reported today.

Reds Hold North

Times News Services

SAIGON — North Vietnam was reported today to have taken control of hundreds of square miles of territory formerly regarded as a no-man's-land south of the demilitarized zone.

Military sources said North Vietnamese have consolidated control of an area which includes the Khe Sanh plateau and territory from the Laotian border north to the old demilitarized zone.

New roads have been constructed and the old French-built main roads, Route 9 and Route 14, have been resurfaced so traffic can use them in all weather.

Informed sources said it would be almost impossible for the South Vietnamese ever to regain control of the area without a large commitment of troops and protracted fighting.

Meanwhile, in Cambodia, United Press International reported that Communist forces firing a barage of toxic gas shells overran two battalions of Cambodian government troops 32 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, killing 20 and capturing 580 others.

The attack Monday near Neak Luong, an important ferry town on the MeKong River, was not reported by the Cambodian command but was confirmed today by both U.S. and Cambodian military sources with access to secret reports from the front, UPI stated.

Command spokesmen, however, have reported a number of toxic gas shellings against Cambodian forces in the area recently.

In Washington Wednesday, a House foreign affairs subcommittee approved a bill curbing the president's power to wage undeclared war. The bill is tougher than the one the traditionally less hawkish Senate voted last year and is considering again.

The main provision in each bill states that when a president commits U.S. forces abroad without Congressional approval, he must stop unless Congress gives its approval within a specified time.

Mayors Split on Method Of Funding Mass Transit

Greater Victoria mayors today were split in their views on a proposal to make automobile drivers pay for mass transit systems.

Greater Vancouver Regional Board has suggested financing rapid transit through a greater gasoline tax, an additional charge on motor vehicle licences and surcharges on downtown parking rates as well as residential electricity rates.

"It's certainly a more intelligent approach to the matter than the trend toward placing the burden on homeowners," Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen said.

The automobile, he said, is "the most highly subsidized thing in Canada" and drivers, rather than homeowners, should be made to pay for transit.

Pollen said a special transit committee of the Capital Regional Board met the provincial government recently and were told the government would pay capital costs and 50 per cent of the operating deficit of mass transit but the municipalities, through regional boards, would have to pay the other 50 per cent.

"I'm not sure this would be the fairest way or the best way of financing," said Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford.

"If we're forced to accept this 50 per cent we'll have to look at alternative ways of raising this and that (the Vancouver idea) is one of the ways," she said.

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young said the government could raise taxes against automobile drivers and remit them to the regional districts.

"I think this would be the route we should go," Young said. "Let the people who are helping to cause the problem pay for it."

"My initial reaction is that I feel I pay plenty now to operate my car," said Les Passmore, acting Saanich mayor.

"I certainly wouldn't want to use the bus," he said. "Like the average motorist, if it's two blocks away I want to take my car."

GOP Aided McGovern —Probers

New York Times

WASHINGTON — Government investigators say they now have evidence that Republican sabotage and espionage efforts in the U.S. election campaign last year were far more widespread than was previously known and were designed to help Sen. George McGovern win the Democratic nomination for president.

Republicans viewed McGovern, the eventual nominee, as the weakest candidate Nixon could face, the investigators said, but added there was no way of determining how much over-all impact the major Republican intelligence effort, organized at a cost not yet fully estimated, had upon the 1972 primaries.

The investigators said that the espionage program, initially authorized by H. R. Haldeman, the White House chief of staff who resigned Monday, included at its peak three networks of agents controlled by the White House and the Committee for the re-election of the President.

The federal investigators said they had confirmed that at least some allegations about Republican disruption voiced by Democratic candidates were substantially correct.

These sources said there is now evidence that a Nixon supporter was infiltrated into the campaign offices of Sen. Edmund Muskie, D—Maine, in early 1972. Once there, he intercepted a variety of confidential documents that were subsequently leaked to the press.

(In addition, three newspapers report today that shortly before the 1960 Democratic national convention, burglary attempts were made on the Manhattan offices of two doctors treating John Kennedy.

(The Washington Post, New York Times and New York Daily News identify the physicians as Dr. Janet Travell, who later became President Kennedy's personal doctor at the White House, and Dr. Eugene J. Cohen.

(Cohen confirmed the break-in and said he felt there was no question that the intruders were after Kennedy's medical file. "The only lock broken was the one on the K file," he said.)

The basic Republican strategy was worked out in early

News Phones Bugged

By BOB WOODWARD and CARL BERNSTEIN
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Nixon administration tapped the telephones of at least two newspaper reporters in 1971 as part of the investigation reportedly ordered by President Nixon into the leak of the Pentagon Papers to the press, according to two highly placed sources in the executive branch.

The wiretapping was supervised by Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt Jr. and G. Gordon Liddy, who were then working in the White House, and it was authorized by John Mitchell while he was attorney-general, one of the sources said.

In this electronic surveillance, according to the same source, Hunt and Liddy supervised an independent team, or so-called "vigilante squad" of wiretappers not employed by the FBI — the agency that normally performs legal wiretapping.

That source named two reporters from the New York Times, which published the Pentagon Papers in June 1971, as being among those whose phones were tapped. Another source confirmed that the telephone of Times' reporters were tapped but could not identify those placed under surveillance.

It is unclear whether the wiretapping was legal. The attorney-general has power to

U.S. MAY SET FUEL USE PRIORITIES

WASHINGTON (UPI) The United States faces the prospect of a serious gasoline shortage this summer and the government might have to set up priorities for allocating fuel, deputy treasury secretary William E. Simon told Congress Wednesday.

"In the short run, we think we may be in a situation in which we may need to take decisions on priorities," Simon said. "We cannot afford to let crops go unplanted or unharvested for lack of diesel fuels for our tractors.

"We cannot let our vital industries close down. We cannot endanger public health or safety."

Plenty of Gas at a Price—Industry

By ALAN FORREST
Times Staff

There will be no gasoline shortage in British Columbia over the next five years.

But prices are definitely leading upward.

Oil companies say that British Columbians are sitting pretty in terms of supply of petroleum products, thanks to the proximity of Alberta's massive fields.

But a spokesman for Imperial Oil in Vancouver said: "Frequent price increases for petroleum products can be expected."

Other sources indicated that Victoria's gasoline price, currently 54 cents a gallon (53.9) for regular could be expected to go to 55 cents within days. At the current rate of increase it will be 60 cents a gallon this time next year.

Premium gasoline, currently 59 cents (58.9) is likely to go to 60 cents now and 65 cents within a year at the present rate of increase.

But there will be plenty of gasoline at higher prices, oil firms say.

British Columbia firms refine 1.5 million gallons per day, only a small increase from the 1.2 million gallons per day 10 years ago.

But the B.C. refineries serve a smaller geographic area than they did 10 years ago. The Okanagan and eastern B.C., once served by Vancouver-area refineries, are now largely handled by Alberta branches.

As long as refined gasoline continues to move into B.C. by tanker truck and train from Alberta, there will be no problem of supply — and oil companies see no economic reasons why the flow should not continue.

In addition there is a good supply of crude oil although wellhead prices are up.

British Columbia refines 128,000 barrels of crude oil per day 4.5 million gallons.

Of this total, 60 per cent comes in the Trans Mountain Pipe Line from Alberta fields, the remainder from B.C.'s Peace River country.

Again there are no economic reasons why this flow should be interrupted.

Oil companies are concerned about the long-term effect of political considerations, however.

In particular the B.C. Energy Act, which could be used to control gasoline prices, could produce a shortage, the companies warn.

Crude oil and gasoline are sold in an unregulated market, which tends to keep prices similar all across the continent.

It is cheaper to continue to serve traditional customers as long as the prices are comparable. However, if B.C. prices are artificially depressed below continental levels, crude oil and gasoline supplies could be diverted to more profitable areas.

The companies argue they need price increases to be able to afford to pay the increased costs of obtaining oil.

They claim they are engaged in a high profit but high risk business and they get nervous when they are restricted by rules that do not apply to their competitors elsewhere in the world.

In addition, they talk a different language from politicians and this makes cooperation difficult.

The industry does not recognize provincial or national boundaries but rather is concerned about costs of transportation and distances to market.

The terms "Canada's needs" or "British Columbia's requirements" are foreign to oil company executives who are busy using words like "cents per barrel" and "transportation costs."

1971, investigators said, when Nixon was running behind Muskie in public opinion polls. The Harris survey, for example, showed that by early May, 1971, Muskie had a 47-to-39 per cent lead over Nixon, an increase of three percentage points in three months. The investigators emphasized that there is no evidence thus far that Republican leaders had held a formal meeting at the White House or elsewhere in which they discussed plans to defeat Muskie so as to increase the chances of McGovern, a South Dakota Democrat.

"Nonetheless," one source said, "there was a definite strategy worked out before the election. They tried to make sure that the Democrats nominated their weakest candidate." In this context, the source said, the bugging of the Democratic committee headquarters in the Watergate complex in June, 1972, was only a small part of the over-all effort.

"The Republicans had people in all of the campaigns," one investigator said, "but not at high levels. They had little people nobody would suspect. They started playing tricks with the avowed goal of heavily influencing the nomination of the Democratic candidate," he added.

The prime espionage target throughout late 1971 and in early 1972, investigators said, was Muskie, whose campaign was repeatedly jarred by inexplicable incidents — such as the disappearance of vital polling data, the misrouting of the candidate's personal plane, and the anonymous "Canuck" letter in the New Hampshire primary that accused Muskie of casting ethnic slurs on French-Canadians.

"We do have evidence that there was infiltration of the Muskie campaign and that many documents were stolen or photographed," one investigator said. He specifically cited a private staff letter to Muskie calling on him to stage hearings on a proposed tax bill in California because it would get him "favorable publicity." The letter, the investigator said, was stolen by an espionage agent and sent to an official in the Republican re-election headquarters who then sent it on to a Washington columnist. When a column about the letter was published a few days later the source said, an embarrassed Muskie cancelled the proposed hearing.

In a private meeting with a group of Republican congressmen a little more than a month ago, Haldeman was reported to have acknowledged being personally responsible for organizing a political intelligence operation in 1972. He was quoted as saying, however, that the project had involved no illegal activities.

The New York Times quoted government investigators Wednesday as saying they had evidence that Haldeman and John Ehrlichman, Nixon's chief domestic adviser who also resigned Monday, along with John Mitchell, former attorney general, conspired with at least three other officials to arrange a cover-up story to obstruct a federal investigation into the full ramifications of the Watergate break-in.

Mitchell issued the following denial Wednesday: "A story appearing in today's New York Times alleging that I conspired with H. R. Haldeman, John Ehrlichman and John Dean to obstruct justice in the Watergate case is absolutely false and without factual foundation."

Oilmen See Barrels, Not Borders

crude oil in Texas, refine it in Japan and sell it in B.C., the companies would do it — if they could.

In fact, it is cheaper for the companies to produce or buy crude in B.C. and Alberta and refine it in the two provinces for B.C.'s consumption.

While current B.C. refining capacity is adequate, there is no large margin or surplus.

The province's requirements are growing at the rate of five per cent per year. And the only refinery expansion in the works — Chevron Canada Ltd.'s North Burnaby plant — could be delayed by protracted negotiations on environmental factors.

There is no deadlock at this stage but company officials are a bit concerned about the lead time necessary from planning stage to construction.

However, any shortfall from B.C. production can easily be made up by bringing in more from Alberta refineries — or by importing by sea.

During rare periods when B.C. demand exceeds supply, refined oil products have been imported into Vancouver. However, contrary to reports emanating from U.S. officials, no crude oil is brought in to Vancouver by way of tanker, the B.C. companies say.

All crude oil moves to the refineries by pipeline from the north and east.

The lack of growth over the last 10 years in B.C.'s refining capacity is a little startling. Although explained by the smaller geographic area being served, the expansion is only on the order of 30 per cent in the decade.

Total capacity was 98,000 barrels per day in 1963, now is about 128,000 barrels per day.

Of this total, 35 per cent becomes gasoline, 35 per cent becomes furnace oil and jet fuel, 10 per cent goes for loss and consumption at the refinery and the remaining 20 per cent is used for industrial purposes like asphalt.

The two largest firms in B.C. are Imperial Oil (whose Ioco refinery is at 34,500 barrels per day, up from 32,000 10 years ago) and Gulf Oil.

Gulf Oil, which purchased British American and Royalite in 1969, has a total capacity of 35,900 gallons. B-A and Royalite had a joint capacity of 23,500 10 years ago.

Shell's Burnaby refinery has reduced capacity to 20,500 from 21,000 10 years ago.

Chevron Standard has gone up only to 20,000 from 18,000 in the decade, although there is an application to expand.

The other two B.C. refineries are Pacific, 10,400 barrels per day, and Union Oil, 7,500.

The figures reflect a tranquil attitude because of plentiful supply of both crude oil and refined products in Alberta.

However, there can be no tranquility about price.

Mid-Eastern oil-producing nations, taking advantage of a shortage in the United States, continue to raise their prices — and Canadian prices must rise correspondingly or increased demand would deplete supply, oil firms say.

In addition, Alberta's fields will not last much beyond the century and oil companies have to write off expenses incurred in Arctic exploration and development.

Crude oil from the Arctic will cost from 10 to 20 times as much as Alberta oil at the well head, according to oil company estimates.

This is because it costs from 10 to 20 times as much to get supplies to the Arctic wells as it cost to supply the Alberta fields.

The days of low-cost crude oil are gone. The price will soar dramatically.

But B.C. will have a guaranteed supply, barring a major confrontation between the provincial government and the oil companies.

QUALITY DRUGS CLAIMED IN PEN

KINGSTON, Ont. (CP) — Prisoners at Millhaven penitentiary have access to a better quality of illegal drugs inside the institution than they could get on the street, the acting head of the psychiatric unit at Kingston penitentiary testified Wednesday.

Dr. Lorne E. Carpenter told a coroner's jury that a prisoner who committed suicide in his cell in the unit's observation section displayed symptoms consistent with methamphetamine (speed) withdrawal. John Edwin Wallace, 44, died after being transferred to the unit from Millhaven penitentiary where he had displayed signs of anxiety.

Carpenter said he learned after an inquiry into the man's death that Wallace had been on a drug "trip" for 30 days before coming to the psychiatric unit.

The coroner's jury ruled that Wallace died Feb. 5 of hanging.

Sexual abuses, drug trafficking and convict brutality have become so rampant at Guelph, Ont., Correctional Centre that there is a danger of a riot by prisoners or a walkout by guards, Morton Shulman charged Wednesday.

Both sources said that the White House conducted earlier wiretaps of other reporters in investigating leaks of information to the news media about the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks.

During the first Nixon administration, the office or home telephones of at least 10 White House staff members were also tapped in the course of investigations into news leaks, the sources said.

In late 1971 or early 1972, it was decided at a Nixon campaign strategy meeting that some members of the same vigilante squad responsible for the Pentagon Papers wiretapping would be used to wiretap the telephones of Democratic presidential candidates, according to one of the sources.

AUTHORIZED BY A-G

Although the activities of the squad were authorized by then-Attorney-General Mitchell, the source said, they were more closely supervised by Assistant Attorney-General Robert Mardian, who later became the political co-ordinator of the committee for the re-election of the president, the sources said.

According to the sources, the wiretapping in the Pentagon Papers case began shortly after the New York Times started publication of the classified multi-volume history of the Vietnam war. The Times had obtained the documents from Daniel Ellsberg, the former defence department analyst now on trial in Los Angeles.

In June, 1971, the government moved unsuccessfully in court to permanently halt publication of the Pentagon Papers on the grounds of national security.

At the time, a White House team known as "the plumbers," was attempting to determine how the Times had obtained the papers.

That project, which was under the direction of former presidential special counsel Charles W. Colson and John Ehrlichman, then Nixon's former principal deputy for domestic affairs, was undertaken on orders from the president, according to a statement given to the FBI last week by Ehrlichman.

According to Ehrlichman's statement, Hunt and Liddy broke into the office of Ellsberg's psychiatrist, after which Ehrlichman said he told them "not to do it again."

According to sources, all records relating to the activities of the vigilante squad that conducted that wiretapping have been destroyed. Only six to eight people had first-hand knowledge of the squad's activities.

Information from national security wiretaps is among the most closely held and sensitive data collected by the U.S. intelligence community and had been traditionally supervised by the justice department internal security division.

The division, which was headed by Mardian during the first Nixon administration, was abolished earlier this year.

Hunt's and Liddy's work as White House "plumbers" was supervised by David Young, a former staff member of the national security council. Young resigned from the council staff about three weeks ago without explanation.

Former White House aide Egil Krogh Jr. was in over-all charge of the "plumbers." Krogh, 33, presently undersecretary of the department of transportation, suddenly took leave Wednesday from his post.

In other developments:

—The finance committee of Nixon's re-election campaign was charged Wednesday by the justice department with concealing a $200,000 contribution by financier Robert Vesco, received April 10, 1972, three days after the Federal Election Campaign Act went into effect requiring disclosure of major contributions and expenditures. Vesco is under investigation by a federal grand jury in New York and is charged in a civil suit by the Securities and Exchange Commission with "looting" $224 million in mutual funds from Investors Overseas Services Ltd., of Geneva, Switzerland.

AIDES SUMMONED

—Top former White House aides H. R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman were summoned before a federal grand jury today while FBI agents sifted through their personal files for evidence that might link them directly to the Watergate scandal. The grand jury called on the two men to testify, sources said, in line with Nixon's instructions that they should tell all they know about last year's political espionage against the Democrats and an alleged cover-up plot. New indictments were expected soon.

The stable weather pattern that brought such fine weather to B.C. in April has broken down and it appears that unsettled weather conditions will prevail over the province for the next couple of days at least. One diffuse but moist weather disturbance will move across the province today. Another is expected to reach the coast tonight while a ridge of high pressure may finally bring some clearing to the western districts late Friday.

No Viet Pullout —Sharp

Times News Services

External affairs' officials in Ottawa Wednesday said the unprovoked attack on two Vietnam ceasefire observer commission helicopters has added weight to the argument that Canada should withdraw from the four-nation International Commission of Control and Supervision.

But in Toronto, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp said the government is sticking with its peace-observation role in Vietnam despite the Wednesday episode.

The Viet Cong said today it opened fire on a United States reconnaissance aircraft misusing a flight corridor for the Vietnam truce commission just below the demilitarized zone.

This explanation was given to International Commission of Control and Supervision (ICCS) officials after the two ICCS helicopters, clearly marked with the commission's distinctive fluorescent stripes, flew into heavy anti-aircraft fire in Quang Tri province Wednesday.

Neither helicopter, carrying one man each from the four commission members — Canada, Hungary, Indonesia and Poland — was hit.

The Canadian attitude, Sharp said, remains that "we will withdraw if there is no improvement" in conditions facing the Canadian contingent, Sharp told reporters, and so far "there has been no substantial improvement."

Elevator Strike Again If Demands Aren't Met

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

British Columbia will be plunged into another elevator strike next Wednesday if five elevator companies do not agree to union demands by Tuesday.

Members of the International Union of Elevator Constructers Wednesday noted 91 -29 in favor of strike action.

They have given the companies until 4:30 p.m. Tuesday to accept an Ontario arbitration decision as also being make for B.C. Arbitration hearings start in Ontario May 15.

The five companies — Montgomery, Turnbull-Dover, Otis, Armor and Westinghouse — sent a telegram to B.C. Labor Minister Bill King in Ottawa Wednesday informing him they were dropping legal section against 154 members of the union.

The legal actions were taken Dec. 22, 1972, after the B.C. Supreme Court ruled the B.C. strike was illegal. The companies' chief negotiator today expressed "disappointment and utter frustration at the union's ultimatum."

"Now we're right back where we were in March with the B.C. local being the only holdout across Canada," E. M. (Ted Tuff of Hamilton said.

"British Columbians from all walks of life have already suffered untold physical and financial hardship because of the seven-month strike.

Tuff said the "below-normal performance" of union members during April had added to the problem.

The Union men are refusing to work overtime, refusing to use their cars and refusing to allow non-union helpers on the job as permit holders.

The companies want to bring in 350 to 400 additional workers to help catch up with an estimated year-long work backlog.

"I can't understand why the local wants to agree now to the Ontario arbitration without knowing what it contains," Tuff said. He added the industry will wait until the awards is announced and then negotiate.

He said he was surprised that the union hadn't waited for King's return before taking the strike vote.

Detective Shot In Toronto

TORONTO (CP) — A Metropolitan Toronto police detective was shot in the abdomen early today when he and another officer went to an east-end house to disarm a man who had threatened a neighbor with a rifle.

Det. George Gerigs, 46, was reported in satisfactory condition two hours later in hospital.

DIRECTOR? . . . REALLY?

"Hello, this is the Victoria Times calling . . . could you please give me some information on Alan Jakel and D. Claude Bergman?"

"Well, yes, I can . . . (pause) . . . but why do you want it?"

"They have been appointed directors of the new Ocean Falls Corporation."

"They have? . . . well I'm Jakel and (pause) hadn't heard about it."

Jakel, a 15-year employee with Crown Zellerbach, the last five at Ocean Falls, is now the office manager. The other directors are Bergman, the assistant manager, and Edward Vesak, who has been running the Ocean Falls mill since it was purchased from CZ earlier this year.

The men are appointed at the pleasure of the cabinet.

The cabinet also released orders which proclaim the Ocean Falls Corporation Act and the Ocean Falls Corporation Appropriation Act effective March 31.

A sum of $2 million is provided to the corporation on a loan basis at prime bank interest rates. In addition, $1 million is provided as payment to Crown Zellerbach of the $789,952 purchase price of the Ocean Falls mill.

Other expenses connected with the town itself bring the total cost of the Ocean Falls takeover to $1 million.

CENTRAL SAANICH TO VOTE ON PUBS

Central Saanich ratepayers will have the opportunity May 26 to allow beer parlors in their municipality.

The provincial cabinet, in an order-in-council released Wednesday, authorized a referendum. Ratepayers will be asked to say yes or no to the question: "Are you in favor of the sale of beer, ale and stout only under a public-house licence for consumption on licensed premises?"

The order for the referendum follows submission of a petition bearing the names of 35 per cent of Central Saanich's ratepayers who requested the vote.

Peter Russell of Saanich has been appointed returning officer for the referendum.

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald said he feels the petition and referendum procedure could be improved in the future. The present system is outdated, he said.

WHAT HAPPENED WHEN AN INDEPENDENT LAB TESTED 3 OF CANADA'S FINEST INTERIOR PAINTS.

One day in February of this year, a chemist, posing as an ordinary consumer, did some rather unusual paint shopping in a major Canadian city.

And in a Color Your World store, he purchased Color Your World interior latex at its list price, $6.98 a gallon.

He did not identify himself by name or profession at any of the stores.

He only received assurance from each dealer that the paint he bought was from fresh stock.

Returning to his office, he removed the labels from the gallon cans, coded them, and delivered them to a major independent research laboratory.

There, the 3 paints were tested in accordance with the Canadian Government Specifications Board's requirements for interior latex satin finish paints. (1-GP-100d).

Weeks later, when the test results were put back together with the brand names, here's what we found:

Color Your World dried hard in 30 minutes. So did another. The third dried in 20 minutes. (Government maximum is 2 hours!)

$9.89-$12.35

All 3 samples passed the Fineness of Grind Test.

All three successfully hid the black and grey squares in the Hiding Power Test.

If you store paint in garage, shed or cottage, the Freeze-Thaw Stability Test is especially important. The Color Your World paint passed all performance and consistency requirements after being frozen and thawed. So did CIL's. The third was unusable and failed the test.

In the Alkali Resistance Test, which measures a paint's resistance to the high alkali content of fresh plaster, only CIL's paint passed.

All 3 passed the Flexibility Test. And the Color Stability Test after 48 hours in the "Fade-Ometer."

The government test of "Applicability and Appearance" is a report based on several carefully recorded observations as to how a paint goes onto a surface, and how it stays on.

Color Your World's interior latex proved slightly superior to the other two when rolled on, and slightly less easy to use than the others when brushed on.

Color Your World and the two more expensive paints all easily passed the government Cleansability Test, which requires soil removal without altered appearance on the paint surface.

And in the Scrubability Test, all 3 withstood a detergent solution and 500 brush scrubs in the washability machine.

We've known that for a fact: We own our factories, sell only through our own Color Your World home decorating supermarkets, and we have our own test labs.

But now, at last, we have independent laboratory proof, that when tested according to government specifications, our Interior Latex is as good as the other paint samples tested.

Now we aren't saying Color Your World paint is the best paint in Canada.

Each of the big paint companies has a top-of-the-line paint at $10 to $14 that's basically as good as ours under most conditions.

What we're saying is this:

Color Your World Interior Latex is the only $12 quality paint you can buy for $6.98 a gallon (standard colors), every day of the year!!!

In other words, the best paint buy in Canada.

Color Your World

Our $12 quality paint costs about $7.

Lab tests show that our $6.98 Interior Latex is equal or better quality than top line paint with advertised list price of $10.95 to $12.35.

Preview at the Pumps

The gasoline shortage in numerous areas of the United States has caused alarm in some quarters. Although the individual consumer is apparently faced at the moment merely with a rise in price, a number of large users — trucking firms, municipal bus services and similar contract customers — are being told there is no more gasoline for them. Some firms report strict quota purchasing, others have halted business until they can fill their tanks.

In a country so dependent on gasoline for highway and city transportation of many kinds the situation could become nightmarish. The basic supply of crude oil, it appears, is still abundant, but explanations vary regarding the cause of the present shortage of refined products. Some say it is merely a result of poor planning, that allocations of oil for various purposes have been faulty. But fuel oil was recently scarce in some cities, and even high grade airplane fuel has been threatened.

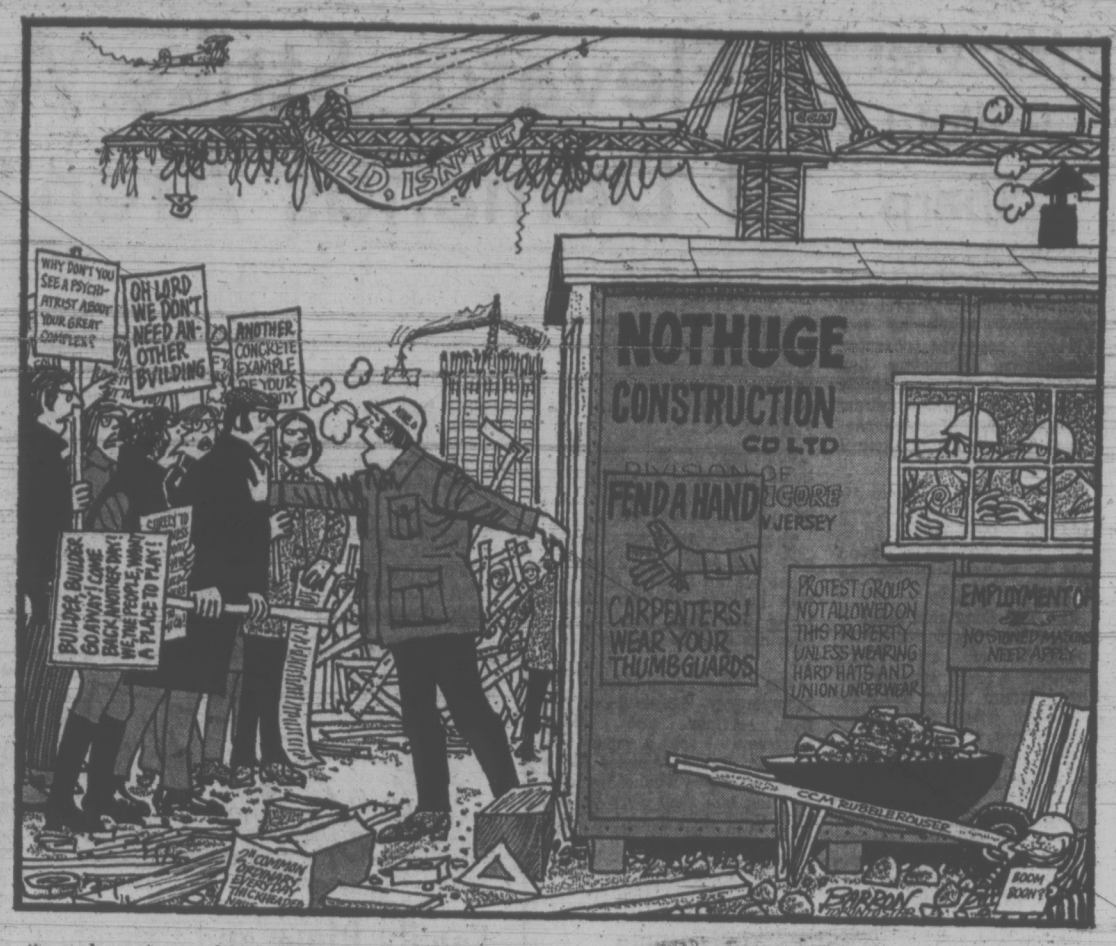
The basic fact is that oil consumption of all kinds has rapidly increased in volume, and appears headed on that course indefinitely. Although there are still large oil deposits in the United States and offshore, the dependence on Middle Eastern supplies is becoming more evident.

Under such circumstances the rush to develop and deliver the Alaska oil discoveries is understandable. Dependence on foreign sources — particularly when they are so unpredictable as the Arab oil lands — is an uncomfortable situation for any great power, and all the more so when the internal combustion engine is the heart of the nation's economy.

A more farsighted view may detect in the current apparently temporary situation a foretaste of what will be in store when the world's oil supplies begin to dwindle to predictable dregs. A sense of panic will grip most countries and many economies may crash unless science and technology have meanwhile come up with a solution.

At the moment such research appears to be desultory and fragmentary. The industry, and governments, are more concerned with protecting the environment from gasoline usage — and this is certainly an aspect of the problem that deserves full attention. But time is getting shorter. Fortunate areas like British Columbia and Alberta should be actively safeguarding their crude oil assets. It will be false economy to cheer export of larger and larger supplies as victories for salesmanship.

The summer of 1973 may well be looked back on someday as the year of warning. The American situation no doubt will improve, as new supplies are brought in from various sources, but the lesson is there for those who look ahead. Suddenly, the planet seems somewhat smaller — a little less secure and lasting a place in the infinity of space.



"... honest ... it's only going to be ten storeys ... quite a small building, really ... set well back and everything ... wait ... I'll show you the plans ... honest, it's ..."

Out of the Drug Quagmire?

When Johnnie came marching home from Vietnam, a large section of United States officialdom braced itself for a major upward surge in the domestic narcotics problem. Easy access to supplies at low prices and the nature of military life in alien Southeast Asia reportedly had drawn a dismaying percentage of servicemen into the habit. When they returned home, according to most assumptions, they would bring with them an overwhelming task to those involved in treatment of addiction and in handling allied difficulties caused by the dependence on drugs.

A recently released Pentagon report challenges that assumption. Says Dr. Richard S. Wilbur, assistant secretary of defence for health and environment: "Despite a high rate of drug experimentation among the Vietnam returnees, most have been found free of narcotics now, and far from the street-addict image that sometimes has been attached to them ..."

The study further stated that most of the men who used narcotics heavily and over a prolonged period in Vietnam stopped when they left Vietnam and had not begun again by the time of interviews eight to 12 months later. It added that only 7 per cent of those who used drugs in Vietnam reported that they had at any time since their return felt dependent on drugs, and only 5 per cent of the total underwent any kind of treatment.

Because of the conventional attitude to addicts — "once a junkie always a junkie" — the report will no doubt be treated with extreme caution.

Some reports tell of only occasional use of heroin by many troops, with relatively few of them taking the drug by injection. The problem therefore did not reach the serious stage which afflicts many addicts on this continent. No doubt the cases will be followed up to learn the permanence of the cures, and some new statistics may be added to the continuing social problem.

Sharing the Recreation Load

The city of Victoria has received a compliment and the area-wide recreation philosophy has been given a boost through the opening of the Cedar Hill Community Centre, a stone's throw from the city boundary and within a few minutes drive of Oak Bay.

As Mayor Curtis pointed out at Tuesday's ceremony this facility provided by his municipality will help to compensate for the long dependence of outside residents on the amenities provided by Victoria. He hoped to see residents of all districts use it as well as other Saanich recreation facilities.

Saanich's indoor recreation chairman, Ald. Fred Severson, emphasized the philosophy with the simple statement that he did not recognize municipal boundaries in the recreational field.

The trend should be widely appreciated. As the senior and larger member of an earlier community, Victoria has carried more than its share of the load in providing buildings and parks for the enjoyment of people living beyond the city limits. No longer the area with the largest population, it continues to supply recreational opportunities for anyone on the southern end of Vancouver Island, but it is now being joined by the other members of the Greater Victoria family. This trend provides greater opportunity for useful and enjoyable leisure pursuits and a happier relationship for all the municipalities concerned.

MAURICE WESTERN

Food Is Still a Bargain?

OTTAWA — The Food Prices Review Board is apparently designed to persuade the public, and notably the New Democratic Party, that the government's heart is in the right place.

It has been plain for some weeks that the government will not countenance, at this stage, any board with independent power of intervention in the pricing process. The new agency, whose members have yet to be announced, will monitor and report. Publicity, achieved through special studies, quarterly reviews and recommendations, is to be the principal means of restraining the price advance.

The old combines legislation, inspired largely by Mackenzie King, relied heavily on publicity. It may well have been effective, operating in times of relative price stability and turning a spotlight on specific situations, usually involving a few firms. But the former, and much criticized, practice was largely phased out years ago in favor of brief and rather colorless summaries which rarely receive much attention.

Different Circumstances

In any case, this is not an era of price stability and it is difficult to believe that publicity alone can accomplish much in the new, and radically different, circumstances. After all there has been a great deal of publicity.

John Young of the former Prices and Incomes Commission counted heavily on it in his struggle to mobilize a public opinion in favor of anti-inflationary measures. We have had much publicized consumer protests and boycotts; weeks of hearings by a special House of Commons committee. But prices, apart from unimportant fluctuations, have continued their upward march.

The Board now being constituted is, quite obviously, not the board demanded in public speeches by NDP spokesmen such as David Lewis and Lorne Nystrom. It is no tiger; it has no power to roll back prices; and it cannot possibly meet the requirement set by NDP members of the special committee who observed, in their statement of April 2, that legislation must provide for steps to ensure that prices be not increased or that they be reduced where necessary for the public welfare. In fact, the government is not offering legislation; the new board members will simply be appointed as commissioners under the Inquiries Act.

How can a board, with such restricted powers, be of value even as a face-saving device for the New Democrats? The answer, presumably, was volunteered by Stanley Knowles in a week-end televised interview.

After observing the lack of machinery or any sort of guarantees that recommendations would be implemented, Mr. Knowles added: "But we did note that Mr. Gray made some reference to the fact that they would consider other courses, other administrative or legislative action, so we're in the position of having to see what the government is prepared to do when we meet on the 7th of May."

HERB GRAY
... other courses

Herb Gray's hint. Such a view would be more understandable if there was serious evidence that ministers are merely awaiting recommendations more informed and factual than the "may be's" and "could be's" of the committee's report.

The available evidence points in exactly the opposite direction. If members of the cabinet share a common view, there must be some significance to the speeches which Eugene Whelan, the new Minister of Agriculture, has been delivering at meeting after meeting. Mr. Whelan's message, as brought to the citizens of Tavistock, Ontario two days before Mr. Gray's announcement is very simple: we in Canada are very fortunate because food is a bargain.

It seems strange that the government, even in its present situation, would set up a special board with powers under the Inquiries act to review bargains.

There is a view that ministers of agriculture enjoy at least partial exemption from the stricter code governing less favored cabinet colleagues. If this is so, Mr. Whelan's conviction that Canadians spend less of their income on food than people in any other country may be an unsure guide to the government's thinking.

On the other hand, in this particular case, Mr. Whelan's thought seems to be compatible enough with what other members of the government have said. John Turner, for months, has been pointing out that many food prices are determined abroad and are thus not susceptible to control. The government has also shown that it is opposed to controls generally; its essential policy is to live with inflation while alleviating particular hardships by adjusting pensions and other guarantee payments; and, beginning next year, by inserting a compensatory formula in tax rates.

In these circumstances, it is extremely unlikely that the government is merely awaiting expert guidance before acting to curb prices in accordance with NDP demands. Moreover, Mr. Gray's hint may well have had to do with policies of a quite different sort already sketched out in the report of the special committee.

Recommendations

Thus a government which stood against controls could accept, without embarrassment, recommendations for further economies in packaging; for introducing now some of the less controversial consumer protection provisions of the proposed Competition Act; for consumer education programs; for nutritional labelling; or for additional subsidies to protect low income groups.

None of these measures would significantly affect prices or make a Bengal tiger out of the Prices Review Board. None of them, presumably, would alarm Mr. Whelan who is persuaded that food prices will continue to go up and looks philosophically on that development.

Any move might convey to us that the government is alive to the situation and acting, at least marginally, in a well-meaning way. In politics, appearances are important even though the impact on grocery bills is minimal — and no one seems to be worrying about all the other bills. They may be enough at the moment for ministers bent on stilling the clamour for controls; perhaps enough for the NDP, which has barked a good deal louder than the government but also has its problems with union leaders who fought the measures proposed by Dr. Young and still look as banefully as many businessmen on direct action to curb prices and costs.

CHARLES BARTLETT

With Cambodia as a Prize

WASHINGTON — With the enemy knocking on the gates of Phnom Penh, Lon Nol's grudging acceptance of a conciliatory council has the look of a reform that has come too late.

Lon Nol is taking help where he can get it, and his belated agreement to readmit Sirik Matak to the leadership council is combined with some strenuous overtures to the Soviets. It is a crowning irony of southeast Asia's complex diplomacy that a leader who wears the brand of an American puppet should reach for a lifeline from the Kremlin.

The Soviets have, it turns out, been just as wrong as the Americans in calling the turn on Cambodia. It was probably because they desired to accommodate President Nixon and lacked a clear view of the Cambodian peasant mentality. So they left Prince Sihanouk to the mercies of the Chinese with confidence that he would find no warmth in Peking. But Mao and Chou En-lai shrewdly treated the God-King like a prince while they enabled him to become an effective guerrilla leader.

Realistic Hope

So the actual hope now is not that Lon Nol's new council will manage to assert its authority over Cambodia. It is more realistic to hope that the council can become the instrument for a negotiated settlement which will yield a government with some balance in its future outlook. But even this may be wishful because Sihanouk has written that he will never enter "any coalition or other compromise" with the Lon Nol group.

Sihanouk supplies this and other timely insights in a new book called "My War with the CIA." While the prince writes with paranoiac intensity about the harassments he has allegedly suffered from American intelligence, he writes with the clarity of a brilliant politician on forces at work in Cambodia and why the Nixon Doctrine has not found this to be favorable terrain.

An important fact illuminated by the book is the resilient nature of Sihanouk himself. Originally enthroned by the French who mistook him for a malleable lamb, he committed himself to the tradition of his namesake grandfather, a fervent champion of Cambodian independence. The passion of Sihanouk's ambition to keep his people

NORODOM SIHANOUK

This was why, after forcing out the French, he gave up the throne in 1955. He felt stifled by the sycophancy of court life and unable to lead or stimulate the nation. He eliminated the U.S. aid program in 1963 because he believed it was corrupting the people and impinging upon his options. He broke with the United States over a military encroachment on his territory and risked his standing with the North Vietnamese to protest their troops' use of his sanctuary.

He has pursued independence with a defiant spirit because his outlook, like his people's, has been shaped by 2,000 years of vulnerability. He seemed in 1971 to have hurt his prospects of regaining power by relying on the North Vietnamese army. But he seems to have been vindicated by Lon Nol's far greater reliance on American bombers along with South Vietnamese and Thai soldiers. "Lon Nol has been," Sihanouk writes, "our best recruiting officer."

Foreign Policy

Sihanouk is not, by his own testimony, making his way back in order to serve as a Communist puppet. He writes of "neutrality with nuances" as his objective in foreign policy. This apparently means he will play the game as he did before his overthrow, larding his neutrality with manifestations of a clear preference for his strong Communist neighbors.

He wants to preside over a socialist, egalitarian society which will not be Communist. He appears bent on recreating a social structure much like the one he left in 1970. He believes in private property for the peasants and nationalization for industry. He will be wary of Japan's economic penetration because, as he writes, "The only real guarantee for maintaining non-alignment is to neutralize the forces of internal reaction."

This was the weakness of the faction on which the Americans and Soviets bet. It represented the forces of internal reaction. It was a poor choice, and its arrant failure makes it important to hope that the U.S. government, despite Sihanouk's allegations, had nothing to do with the machinations which brought it to power.

Save the Strip

At a time when the present government has declared its interest in preserving the green areas on this peninsula, can anything be done to stop the latest scheme to ruin the grass verge, edging the Patricia Bay Highway, between Macdonald Park Road and Tryon Road beside the Inlet, by putting in car parking for more than 100 cars waiting for the Swartz Bay ferry?

These line-ups only occur a few times a year, but the beauty of the grass will be gone for ever if a large area is blacktopped.

The park area under threat is also a bird sanctuary and if more cars are encouraged to park there, the geese, who graze there in winter, the ducks and herons will be driven away. Children have already been seen throwing stones at the ducks.

The proposed comfort stations are perhaps necessary, and the lessen of two evils, and will only be erected if necessary. But, please let this small but lovely strip of grass be preserved and not ruined for all time for the doubtful benefit of the motorists, who are sure to cause more damage to the remaining grass, shrubs and wildlife if massed together, than, as now, strung out along the highway.—Hilary Swinburne (Mrs.), 2175 Curteis Rd., R.R.I. Watergate Trail Began With CIA 'Dirty Tricks'

By JAMES EAYRS

In May, 1952, George Kennan went to Moscow to assume his ill-fated ambassiate. (Stalin was to declare him persona non grata, he quit Russia under a cloud.) It was a frigid season of the Cold War, and to the surprise of the newly-arrived ambassador the quarters in Spaso House, his official residence, did not appear to be under electronic surveillance.

Technicians were summoned from the United States to give the place a going-over. Feigning the composition of a despatch so as to activate whatever bugging apparatus the Soviets might have installed, Kennan watched the experts as they searched the building room by room. They located nothing.

★ ★ ★

"I droned on with the dictation," Kennan records in his memoirs, "the technicians circulated around through other parts of the building. Suddenly, one of them appeared in the doorway of the study and implored me, by signs and whispers, to 'keep on, keep going' . . . Centering his attention finally on a corner of the room . . . just below a round wooden Great Seal of the United States that hung on the wall, he removed the seal, took up a mason's hammer and, quivering with excitement, extracted from the shattered depths of the seal a small device, not much larger than a pencil, which, he assured me, housed both a

LODGE

The device and its ingenious housing were duly sent back to the United States. The Eisenhower administration decided to display them to the world for whatever propaganda value might accrue. Its representative at the United Nations, Henry Cabot Lodge, produced them before the astonished gaze of the Security Council (and the averted gaze of Yakov Malik), as further evidence of the deceit and perfidy of Soviet international behaviour. One up for the Free World.

That the Soviet Union's embassy in the United States might have been under similar surveillance is a thought that does not appear to have crossed George Kennan's mind—because in all probability it wasn't. There had not yet developed within the Central Intelligence Agency that "Department of Dirty Tricks" which over the next two decades was to make much of America's overseas operations resemble less the work of a reputable foreign office than the work of some global mafia.

The descent into the gutter so long delayed — there persisted at the end of the Second World War, as there had at the end of the First, that attractive streak of idealism which had caused Herber Hoover to exclaim "that through three hundred years America had developed something new in a way of life of a people, which transcended all others of history"—was swift when once begun.

The U.S. policy community eagerly accepted counsel from hard-nosed strategists from Harvard that if it hoped to prevail in the struggle with communism for hearts and minds and vital interests, it should solicit "advice from the underworld, or from ancient despotisms."

Once endowed with advice from both underworld and ancient despotism, the U.S. policy community made up for lost time. Its repertoire of dirty tricks included all that money could buy; and no underworld gang, no ancient despotic court, had a greater slush fund at its disposal. Alone of the agencies of government the C.I.A. was not required to audit its books or even offer a rough approximation of its budget to the Congress. But it was well known to dispose of billions every year.

So spying, bribing, blackmailing, murdering, became standard operating procedures. Presidents differed in their degree of interest in and awareness of these dark facets of their foreign policies. (Ike didn't want to know, JFK was fascinated.) But none tried to put a stop to them.

As involvement in Vietnam grew more and more inextricable, dirty tricks became more and more excusable. Abnormality became the norm, exceptions found themselves the rule. That same Henry Cabot Lodge who'd waxed rhetorically against the iniquities of Soviet spying turned ten years later into a party to an American coup d'etat, perhaps to an American assassination d'etat, with Ngo Dinh Diem its victim.

The dirty tricks were meant to stop at America's edge, O.K.'d for export only — just as the films produced by the U.S. Information Agency, however instructive or diverting, might not be screened for an American audience at home.

But they could not stop at America's edge — any more than whisky during prohibition, heroin today. If spying, bribing, blackmailing, murdering, could be justified by America's noble ends abroad, could they not be justified by no less noble ends at home?

And what end more noble, what end more compelling, than to frustrate the deliverance of the great Republic into the hands of those who, on their own admission, stood ready to legalize pot, supply abortion on demand, soak the rich, disarm in a hostile world, bring America's mission in South-east Asia to a craven and dishonourable close?

Such was the line of argument which swayed those Republicans who concluded — sometime between George McGovern's sweep of the Wisconsin primary in April 1972 and the rolling of his bandwagon for nomination — that any means were justified to stop such a man with such an outlook from becoming president of the United States — up to, and including, sabotage of the democratic process. For was not such a man with such an outlook as much an enemy of the people as any foreign leader in any foreign capital with aggressive designs upon their country?

Such is the logic that led straight to the Watergate, and as such logics go there is much to be said on its behalf. Such logics, fortunately, cannot travel very far. They stumble upon and fall over their own premise — in this case, the premise that in national security policy, ends justify means.

The great Republic is now in a mess without a like in its long and largely honorable history. Who are the would-be saboteurs of its democracy? Every passing day identifies culprits higher up the White House line-of-command. The President himself is no longer immune to a charge of which there can be hardly any graver. Did Richard Nixon know that his closest aides and associates — the trusted Orange County minions — were as ready to subvert an American presidential election as the C.I.A. is ready to subvert elections in banana republics or emerald isles? Then he should be impeached. Did Richard Nixon not know? Then he should resign.

Any enthusiasm for either of these outcomes is quelled by the reflection that his constitutional successor in both cases would not be the leader of the opposition but the vice-president of the United States. People are said to get the government they deserve: watching the gathering storm over the White House, that seems somehow too harsh a verdict.

Ecology Gets Down to the Nitty-Gritty of Politics

FORD

FORDS

By ANNE CHISHOLM
New Statesman

WASHINGTON — Earth Week was marked across the United States last month but nobody exactly went overboard about it.

Three years ago the campuses went wild, with ecology freaks giving away flowers and organic foods; Fifth Avenue in New York was closed to traffic while politicians strolled after the new bandwagon; and advertisers boosted ecological shampoo (no detergent) and ecological suits (no artificial fibres).

Earth Week 1973 has been celebrated by the Nixon Administration's postponing the clean air standards for cars by a year, in response to pressure from the Detroit manufacturers.

At the same time, in his long-awaited message on energy, Nixon is suspending the limits on sulphur discharges for three years, to protect the domestic coal industry; and his veto on funds previously voted for cleaner water and sewage programs has just been upheld by Congress.

All this might lead one to suppose that the steam has gone out of the environment movement here. But what in fact is happening is that environmental issues are moving more and more into the forefront of politics, where they belong.

The evidence that the administration and the big corporations are finding it almost impossible to fulfil many of their promises is, paradoxically, encouraging committed environmentalists, who believe that environmental imperatives, if taken seriously, must involve reconsideration of many of the most cherished assumptions of U.S. political and economic policy.

In the past two or three years the U.S. environment movement has grown up. It has two major national successes to its credit — the rejection of the SST (the supersonic airliner) and the stalling of the Alaska pipeline.

All over the country local groups have become better organized and more active, with lawyers in particular using the Environmental Policy act of 1970 as well as the multitude of new state enactments on pollution standards to check power plants, dams, highway projects and offshore oil drilling.

'Dirty Dozen'

The League of Conservation Voters has had great impact with its studies of the environmental voting records of senators and congressmen. In the last election, the chief offenders (known as 'The Dirty Dozen') found themselves up against well-organized and well-informed opposition, and 10 lost their seats as a result.

Moreover, the frequently predicted environment backlash has so far failed to materialize. This may be because most people have yet to recognize that environmental improvements will require them to renounce some of the more convenient but wasteful products of American affluence.

Health food shops may be booming, ecology-conscious middle-class families may be trying to live without plastics, colored Kleenex or a second car; but the supermarkets display more disposable gadgets and instant food than ever.

Few people really believe that the big auto companies are incapable of producing cars to meet the Environmental Protection Agency's standards, despite the president of the Ford Motor Company's recent claim that the industry "has been backed to the cliff edge of desperation" and that, if the standards were enforced, it could mean "a complete shutdown of the U.S. auto industry."

Henry Ford II has accused environmentalists of creating the so-called energy crisis, saying that his company had postponed plans to enlarge several plants in Ohio because the state power authorities couldn't guarantee fuel supplies, adding direly: "If the ecologists are going to block these kinds of programs then they will have to take the responsibility."

You don't have to be a fervent environmentalist to wonder why, if the Japanese can produce clean cars, as they have, and even offer to sell the relevant technology to the U.S. manufacturers, Detroit should be quite so desperate — or why, when none of the power plants or oil pipelines held up in the past couple of years could possibly yet be producing, the shortages should already be affecting industrial and domestic consumers.

Unions on Sideline

So far the unions here have stayed on the sidelines. But there is no evidence that organized labor has yet taken an anti-environment stance, despite provocation. In recent months, environmental leaders like Barry Commoner have been making useful contact with union leaders, beginning to forge an alliance that could help both parties. Nor is there much sign that the public is blaming the environmentalists for the energy crisis, which has been a national preoccupation during the past few months.

One point has become much more accepted during the energy crisis debate: that steps will have to be taken to rationalize energy consumption, not only in America but all over the industrialized world. The United States, as the highest consumer of energy in the world, is inevitably in the front line.

Alternative sources of energy may indeed be discovered, but so far the U.S., like Britain, shows every sign of relying almost entirely on the development of nuclear breeder reactors, which will create terrifying safety and waste-disposal problems. In the face of this realization, three main lines of action seem to be emerging.

The administration and big business line, predictably, is to rely on 'free market forces', i.e. higher prices, to force a gradual cut-back in energy consumption by individuals. Obviously the poor would be the first to feel the pinch.

Lower the Heat

Then there is the hard environmentalist line, pushed by the more political and practical activists like Commoner, which holds that if the environment really mattered as much to business and industry as convenience, high productivity and profits, much wasted energy could be saved.

For instance, it takes five times as much power to move goods by road as by rail; therefore American railroads should be extended, not — as is happening — dismantled; or again if 65 degrees instead of 75 degrees were accepted as the central-heating norm, the nation's fuel consumption would drop by 3.6 per cent.

Then there is the soft environmentalists' line, typified by the experimenters who are setting up communities to work out ecologically sound methods of building, farming and small-scale power production.

Three years ago, at the time of the first Earth Week, everyone from Nixon to the eco-freaks could join in the chorus about "saving the environment," but now the battle of interests has begun.

Worse Than a Prison

By BOB HUNTER
The Sun

Until very recently, a good number of local lawyers were under the impression that if they got a client committed to Riverview, instead of jail, they had somehow scored a victory.

One such lawyer told me that he really thought of Riverview as a lesser evil than prison. Or at least he used to think that.

"Not any more," he explained. "Once your client disappears into Riverview, he might never be seen again."

The point is that individual rights are not so clearly spelled out for the person locked up in a mental institution as they are for a person in jail. There is no guarantee about when a person might be released.

There are no guarantees about a lot of things. Inside a mental institution, individual rights are as blurred as they are anywhere in our society. There is nothing to stop authorities from locking you away in solitary confinement, nothing to stop them from forcing tranquilizers down your throat, or injecting them, or strapping you to a table and jolting you with electricity.

Rights? What rights?

"The fact is," said my lawyer friend, "not many lawyers realized how bad conditions were in Riverview, especially from the legal point of view. Now we're catching on."

Several lawyers have now gotten together to form the Mental Patients Rights Committee, the same group that initiated a demonstration at Riverview a few weeks ago. Lawyer R. Dale Carr-Harris says that the time has come for "repeated court actions."

In an article published in the Mental Patients Association newsletter, Carr-Harris observes that "so-called mental illness is not mental and it is not illness. From the viewpoint of the individual, it is an existential problem in living. From the viewpoint of others, it is a question of socially unacceptable conduct.

"If the conduct amounts to crime and the individual is brought to trial, there are procedural safeguards which give the accused at least a sporting chance. But if the conduct is thought to be a 'medical' problem, ideas of justice and fairness are obscured by the metaphorical rhetoric of 'health' and 'illness'—and thus the doors of tyranny are left wide open."

He adds that everyone should be aware that means are available for protecting the civil rights of all persons whether they are called "mentally ill" or not.

"Recourse may be had to the law for resisting unwanted psychiatric interventions, obtaining money damages for the consequences of wrongful deprivations of liberty or spoiled identity and obtaining judicial release from the mental hospital," he wrote.

"The problem is that few persons defined as mental patients are aware of the legal steps they could take and those who are aware are often too demoralized or incapacitated by the 'treatments' imposed upon them to take any steps at all.

"Challenging our psychiatrized society by repeated court actions is an important form of political confrontation for two main reasons.

"If successful, it establishes a useful precedent. Whether successful or not, it enhances public awareness. Legislative changes are important and deserve our support, but legislative changes will leave oppression unchanged unless public consciousness is also changed.

"Individuals who confront institutional psychiatry by legal action will need a special kind of courage. Disbelief in 'mental illness' is likely to be labelled 'mental illness' itself, just as disbelief in witchcraft was at one time considered heresy."

FORD COURIER

Courier is a little pickup with a big 1400 lb. capacity for people and payloads. That means there's plenty of room in back for large cartons, ladders and other workaday items. But it can also be used for leisure activities, with plenty of space for camping, fishing, hunting equipment, or bringing home those bulky treasures from the country auction.

And while Courier can pack in what you need to head out for fun, it is also built to be pretty practical. Everything from the powertrain to the cab and body are designed with low maintenance costs in mind.

Courier is also easy on gas, easy to maneuver, and easy to buy at a little pickup price.

And if you're in the market for a handy little pickup, it's nice to know that now you don't have to look any further than your local Ford or Mercury Dealer. He will be happy to show you the Ford Courier . . . today.

Proxy Form Draws Complaint

MONTREAL (CP) — A former member of the Ontario legislature complained at Canadian Pacific Ltd.'s annual meeting Wednesday that the company's proxy form contains "important deficiencies" and should be changed.

Elmer Sopha, former Liberal member for Sudbury, said the form doesn't provide space for other than the management group to be named as surrogate of the shareholder.

Sopha said he was speaking on behalf of a shareholder who holds more shares than the combined holdings of all the directors.

Comment on the proxy form was first made by M. J. Fielding, also of Sudbury, and the son of C. A. Fielding, a former CP Ltd. director who resigned in October, 1971.

Fielding asked if the board of directors would agree to have the proxy form revised to allow shareholders to insert names of surrogates other than management.

Sopha said that, "in this age of participatory democracy, the directors do not rule by divine right."

Ian D. Sinclair, chairman and chief executive office of the company, said he and company lawyers "are of the opinion that the proxy form is in accordance with laws of the country."

He said the company is governed by the Railway Act, and the form meets the requirements of that law.

However, he said the company will attempt to make adjustments within the confines of the law.

Sopha said the railway act does not prohibit the company from leaving a blank space for shareholders to writ in surrogates of their choice.

He also complained of the computer-card form the proxy was printed on.

The proxy questions were among a number raised at the annual meeting.

Sinclair said in his report to shareholders that earnings for the first quarter this year were $28.5 million or 38 cents a share, compared with $15.1 million or 21 cents in the first quarter last year.

CPI INCOME CLIMBS 60%

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canadian Pacific Investments Ltd. reports consolidated net income of $16.1 million in the first quarter of 1973, up from $10 million in the corresponding period of 1972.

After providing for preferred dividends, net per common share was 30 cents, against 18 cents a year ago.

The company said improvement in earnings was particularly notable in its forest products interests. Earnings from oil and gas were also higher because of higher prices and greater oil production. Investment income rose mainly because of larger dividends received on CPI's investments in forest products firms.

Desk Jobs Ripe for Production Line Technique

MANAGEMENT MEMO

By R. F. BOWMAN
Manager, Kates, Peat, Marwick and Co.

There is no magic formula which will overnight, improve the efficiency of a clerical operation. What is needed is a method of attacking the problem so as to change an organization "shake-up" from a hit and miss attempt to a systematic approach to effect such improvement. While any one or combination of approaches will not provide a panacea for paperwork problems, the executive who properly draws upon them will achieve a considerable degree of success.

At the present time management techniques are being applied to clerical operations on a broader scale than ever before. They include short-interval scheduling, clerical work measurement and a new system called Office Modapts, and quality control programs.

Short-interval scheduling (SIS) is an application of one simple production line techniques to clerical operations. It gears the work input to each clerk to a realistic level for a given period of time. It provides feed-back data to the supervisor which reveals when expected output falls behind the input. With the most common period of time in use being one hour, it is easy to see how a supervisor is able to keep on top of tre production status within his unit.

WON'T HELP

The data will show which clerks are consistently unable to keep abreast of the required output level but unless this output level is established by measurement SIS will control only against the current average performance and will not help to simplify work or reduce its content.

SIS also provides management with a technique for establishing staffing requirements for a given task when a specific volume of work is being received or anticipated. When staffing requirements can be determined in this manner, the need to staff each task for peakload situations can be eliminated. Cross training for a group of clerks who can be shifted from task to task as determined by incoming work volumes provides a solution to peakload problems.

Clerical work measurement establishes realistic production levels and determines what an average clerk can achieve in productivity on a given task.

Many offices operate overall at about 60 per cent efficiency, usually due to lost time than variations in the pace of people working. Standards based on historical production data tend to build this poor level of efficiency into the figures that management will be used as productivity guidelines.

Work measurement techniques, when properly used, give management a better estimate of actual work content and therefore the output required to establish a 100 per cent productivity level for an average clerk performing a given task.

The most commonly used techniques for clerical work are predetermined motion time systems in which each element of an operation is identified and a time is allowed for it based on extensive experimental observation. These systems usually involve very detailed study by a highly experienced analyst to synthesize a time.

One of the newest and simplest systems yet devised, called Office Modapts, gets over this problem since it requires only limited training and can be taught to personnel without previous work measurement or technical training. In this way an "in-house" capability to set standards and evaluate methods can be built up very quickly and easily without the need for complex and extensive manual tables.

CHANGES FIRST

In scheduling the implementation of SIS or clerical work measurement programs, executives should not foget that changes in task work content or in methods and procedures being used may significantly affect production standards and work scheduling. Any such changes that are required should be made before implementing SIS as a work measurement system. Considerable effort may be wasted if this procedure is not followed.

The actual efficiency of any clerical operation can be materially different from the apparent efficiency if a significant percentage of the work must be reprocessed due to errors. Care must be taken to limit errors and maintain an acceptable error ratio, particularly for SIS and clerical work measurement programs.

Quality control progrms in clerical operations are, in today's offices, often limited to the use of checkers or proof readers. In many cases where errors ca be significant or have been a problem, 100 per cent of the work is checked. In office operations where computer input data are being prepared, manual checking may be supplemented or replaced through use of computer edit routines. The computer can and should be programmed to test data entered against certain critieria and to reject any input that contains invalid data.

ZERO DEFECTS

Installation of a "zero defects" program can also be helpful in improving quality. Such a program utilizes awards, contests, slogans and the like to motivate workers to do their jobs right the first time.

In applying the broad gamut of management tools to clerical operations, one must ask a series of questions: Why is something done? How should it be done? When should it be done? Where should it be done? Who should do it?

Asking these questions will always reveal a better way of measuring clerical performance and thus contributing to the efficiency of a company's

LOTTERY TICKET SELLERS SOUGHT

Organizers of the Canada Summer Games lottery are looking for more agents in Greater Victoria.

To date only one local organization — the Navy League of Canada Victoria branch — has been authorized to sell tickets in B.C.'s first legal high-stakes lottery.

"We have been concentrating our efforts in the Lower Mainland so far," says lottery spokesman Eric Heiman, "and now we are going to make more of an effort elsewhere in the province."

Only non-profit community organizations are authorized to act as agents for the lottery, in which $9 from the $24 price of each book of tickets goes to the selling organization. Nearly 100 have so far been authorized throughout the province.

Heiman said no cut-off date for authorizing selling organizations has been set but he expects it to be "sometime in July."

He expects the peak selling period to be in May and June. Tickets will be sold until Aug. 9, date of the final draw.

Department Officially 'Dead'

The provincial department of rehabilitation and social improvement is officially dead.

A cabinet order released Wednesday authorizes the change of name to department of human resources. Minister Norman Levi had told the legislature earlier of the coming change, saying he wanted to make his department more people-oriented in name.

The change of name was among a number of pieces of legislation which were proclaimed effective by the cabinet through orders-in-council. Some acts will come into effect immediately, others will be held off for a few months.

Among the proclaimed acts is one containing amendments to the Mortgage Brokers Act, which produced considerable debate and a number of disclosures from Dave Brousson (L — North Vancouver-Capilano) about mortgage abuses during the past session.

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald said the amendments, which will become effective July 1, require full disclosure of the interest rates attached to mortgages.

Also proclaimed: May 1 — amendments to the County Courts Act, the Laws Declaratory Act, the Legal Professions Act, the Sale of Goods Act, the Societies Act and the Fair Sales Practices Act; July 1 — amendments to the Debt Collection Act, the Regulations Act; Oct. 1 — amendments to the Securities Act, the Co-operative Associations Act, the Trust Companies Act, the Credit Unions Act and the Companies Act.

RCMP PLANS BIRTHDAY 'ROADEO'

Colwood RCMP will mark the 100th birthday of the force with a safe driving "roadeo" June 10.

Sgt. Ralph Browne said the roadeo will be held in the Colwood Plaza parking lot on the last day of the Gllangcolme celebration, held each year by the Colwood-Langford-Metchosin area.

Students from School District 62, which includes Sooke, will write a driving exam. Those who pass qualify for a practical exam in cars supplied by the RCMP.

The leading two boys and two girls will be awarded all-expense-paid trips to the Kelowna Regatta July 28 and 29.

Application forms may be obtained at Sooke, Belmont, Dunsmuir and Elizabeth Fisher high schools and Shoreline elementary. They are also available at the Sooke and Colwood RCMP offices.

Applications must be completed by May 15.

When Baycrest says No-Frost, that's exactly what you get. No frost. Ever. And that means no more tedious defrosting chores. No more stuck-together packages. No more annoying moisture accumulation. Even in the stickiest weather.

The Baycrest defrost system automatically activiates itself every six hours — regardless of the temperature adjustment. You don't have to do a thing — except enjoy all the extra time you'll save!

And there's more. The 115 lb. capacity freezer comes complete with two plastic ice cube trays and separate temperature adjustment. The refrigerator has two porcelain crisper drawers, two 10-position shelves, butter compartment and porcelain interior liner. And you have a choice of right or left hand opening doors. And a choice of white, avocado, or harvest gold exterior finish. Plus the Baycrest guarantee of one year on parts and labour, four additional years (parts and labour) on sealed compressor and 5 additional years on compressor parts only.

If all that doesn't convince you that the Baycrest No-Frost is one of the best buys in town, just ask one of the hundreds of people who already own one. That's all the proof we think you'll need.

Province to Share In Rezoning Profits

Attorney-General Alex Macdonald Wednesday said the provincial government is seeking ways for all the people to share in increased land values that come as the result of government decisions.

He said a new highway or new zoning can greatly increase the value of land and this increased profit should be shared with the people through the government.

Macdonald said he will invite suggestions from the real estate industry how this government-created value could flow back to the people.

A total of 360 attended, including real estate agents, salesmen and board officers from across the province.

Board chairman Eric Charman and James Tyler, president of the Victoria Society of Real Estate Salesmen, were installed at the meeting along with the officers of both groups.

Tyler said the joint meeting was a symbol of the co-operation between employer and employee in the Victoria real estate industry.

In his short address, Macdonald said he will invite officials of the real estate industry to suggest new directions the government might take in dealing with land which is "next to people, our most important resource."

He said now that the session is over, he woud have more time for meetings and was eager to meet real estate representatives.

Macdonald said the whole concept of land ownership is changing. There were no absolute rights of property.

He gave no details of what new directions he had in mind for the real estate industry but told them they could expect changes.

Macdonald got a standing ovation when he was introduced but applause was more restrained at the conclusion of his speech.

But Where Can They Get Some Help?

By WAYNE HARDING
Times Staff

When you dial the number listed in the telephone book for "Community Information Service," you hear a couple of rings and then the recorded voice of an operator who says, "The number you are calling is no longer in service."

For some people in Greater Victoria the message is symptomatic of the frustration they face when they seek information on medical, legal, financial and other urgent personal problems. (The Community Information Service folded last year.)

As the area has become larger, information on who can offer help has become harder to find — even though the number of agencies and their services have grown.

The people who suffer the most frustration in seeking help are the poor and the disaffected. Often they are those least able to understand or cope with the regulations of agencies.

"Most people aren't aware of the service available to them," Laurie Smith has found. He is a counsellor with Cool-Aid, the youth-oriented agency which offers a wide variety of services, including a hostel, to those who happen to find it.

And how do they find it?

There are referrals from other agencies, says Smith, "but kids sort of stumble through town. They hear about us most of the time from talk on the street."

Like others who work in the field, Smith feels there is a gap in community service in Victoria — at the point where a person first tries to find where to go and what to do to solve his problem, whether it's getting a cheap bed for the night or keeping one's son off heroin.

Once the right agency is found, "the bulk of people get good service," Smith says. But he adds it wasn't always that way and some glaring flaws remain.

"City welfare has a long way to go," he claims.

"I've taken kids down there myself. It's pretty inhuman — just the manner . . . They don't take into consideration the space a person is in when he goes for welfare. It's pretty traumatic."

Mrs. Susan Talbot, president of the Community Action Group, sees a centralized information office as a natural function of the soon-to-be-created regional social service organization now under study by a committee appointed by Human Resources Minister Norman Levi.

"We think we've made a good case to the committee," she says.

She sees a centralized information service linked with the Community Action Group's "community advocate" program, a scheme in which volunteers go through the red-tape of agencies with the recipient of the service.

Ray Ferris, community services supervisor of the Family and Children's Service, agrees that a central office and single telephone number are not enough.

"You can set up an office with some file cabinets and maybe even a computer, but you really need a dynamic referral service with dynamic individuals who will go out on the side of the person seeking information or help."

Under the present scheme in which two dozen agencies work pretty much on their own, says Ferris, each agency "lives on its own reputation." People find services by word of mouth and "people will go where the action is."

"Our name is known and people know they can come to us," he says. At the same time, the Salvation Army makes many referrals to other agencies.

"Yeah, there are cracks (in the continuity of social services) including in the information area. But then, I guess, there always will be."

No More Highrises —Study

A 1973 James Bay Study which will be used as a guide in rezoning the area eliminates further highrise zoning and cuts down severely on frame apartment building zones.

The study by the city's planning and community development office goes beyond a draft study circulated in December.

The study aims to encourage a considerable amount of family housing to mix with the emerging majority of childless apartment dwellers.

It will go before council for discussion.

A city hall source today said it reflects two major changes: Introduction of federal grants for renovating old houses, and the decline of industry at the west end of the peninsula.

COUNCIL INFLUENCE

The study also reflects a stronger influence by city council, particularly that of Mayor Peter Pollen, who swore to curb the wild apartment-building boom that hit the area at the end of the 1960s.

The James Bay Study includes a map showing proposed zoning for the area which places a new "low density multiple dwelling" zone over most of the area west of Oswego Street.

The mid-section of the area remains devoted mostly to frame apartment buildings, with the notable exception of the Dallas Road waterfront from Dock to Menzies streets, which remains devoted to duplex or family housing.

Nearly all housing in the east sector of the area is protected by proposed duplex zoning.

The over-all effect of the proposed zoning is to freeze further highrise development except at the designated shopping centre at the intersection of Simcoe and Menzies.

Most of the frame apartment zoning covers areas already developed by apartments or inevitably destined in that direction.

The policy towards the area is essentially a conservationist one which foresees a growth pattern over the next 20 years related closely to that of the city as a whole. In the last few years James Bay's population has grown much faster than that of other areas. Ultimate population is put at 14,000, compared with the present estimated population of 8,500.

The planning department acknowledges that transportation will continue to be serious problem in the James Bay area, which is cut off from the rest of the city by the Legislative Buildings and Beacon Hill Park.

BOTTLENECK

The new study says detailed work will be carried out to examine the street system of bottleneck areas.

"Transit improvement potentials, staggered hours and parking place controls should be investigated as well as possible street improvements," the study says.

Policy for Ogden Point docks, which is served by mammoth trucks which drive directly through residential areas of James Bay, is firmly in favor of retaining the docks at its present size with increased emphasis upon servicing by water transportation as opposed to trucking.

It is proposed to make thorough use of federal funds which are increasingly available for renovating older areas.

Corner stores are to be retained under a special zoning.

'Non-Toxic' Materials Only Dumped in Sea: Manager

Mine manager Jack Clyne said that while there is a break, he denied any harmful material is being washed up on the beach.

The material we are discharging into the sea is non-toxic. "It is finely crushed rock."

He said the company is abiding by the pollution control branch regulations and not allowing heavy metals to run into the sea.

Clyne claimed that 99 per cent of the residents of Jordan River are satisfied the regulations and standards are adequate.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Margaret Whitney of Jordan River said the break in the pipe is dumping slurry close to shore and ruining beaches.

The company in August, 1971, was granted permission by PCB to dump tailings in the strait, subject to a number of conditions to control pollution of beach and sea life.

One of these was that it discharge tailing at a minimum depth of 40 feet, some 1,500 feet from the beach area. The company now wants this changed.

Executive director Dennis Young of the Capital Region Board, said today the board has protested to the Pollution Control Branch against the application to discharge coarse mine material 10 feet below the low water line and its fine material at a depth of 40 feet.

Young said the board did not see why the discharge control should be relaxed when "there are indications that the company is not abiding by regulations and standards set up by the Pollution Control Branch."

Young said the board has also asked the PCB to conduct a thorough investigation before dealing with the company's application.

"We have also alerted the federal fisheries department and the B.C. fish and wildlife branch that there appears to be a pollution problem in area," he said.

THIRD-CLASS MAIL MOSTLY AFFECTED

Pickets around Vancouver's main post office continued to disrupt the flow of mail to and from Victoria today but a local spokesman said it is mostly third-class mail and parcel post which is affected.

A post office spokesman in Vancouver said discussions have been held with the federal justice department and an injunction may be sought against further picketing.

★

The pickets, members of the Teamsters' Union, are protesting award of a contract for delivering mail between Vancouver and Prince Rupert to a non-union company, Ponderosa Trucking of Mission.

The flow of mail between Vancouver and Victoria was affected Wednesday and again today but a load of first-class mail from Vancouver arrived in Victoria Wednesday night.

The local post office said today people should continue to use the mails for the present.

$51, $40 Tax Boosts For Saanich Residents

Typical 1973 property tax increases in Saanich will be $40 and $51, depending on the school district the owner resides in.

Mill rates will be incorporated in a budget bylaw coming before a special meeting of council tonight.

Saanich is the only municipality in Greater Victoria incorporating two school districts, with the result that two sets of tax rates must be produced.

In the urban sector — the Saanich part of School District 61 — property owners will pay at a rate or 78.885 mills, up 4.63 mills from 1972, or an average $51 increase.

In rural School District 63 — roughly north of Royal Oak — the tax rate will be 79.535 mills, an increase of 3.61 mills, approximately equal to $40 on a typical property.

The rates include a general and debt tax at 45.48 mills, up 2.73 mills from 1972; a .3 mill increase to .68 mill for regional hospitals, and .015 mill, unchanged, for Municipal Finance Authority.

The school rate in District 61 is 32.71 mills, up 1.6 mills, and in District 63 is 33.36, up .58.

The tax rates do not cover sewer parcel or sewer maintenance charges which are dollar amounts levied separately.

These figures have been set but have not been presented to council. It is anticipated the previously-estimated $20 increase for sewer parcel charge will now be more like half that amount, and the user charge will show a marginal increase.

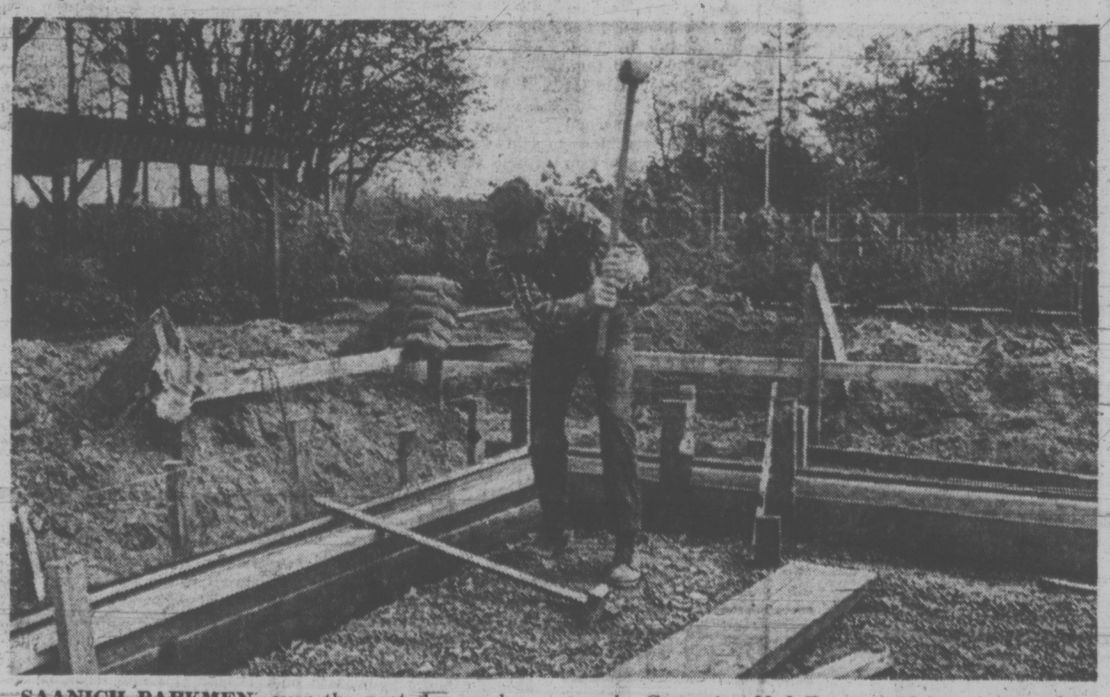
Last year the amounts were $44.30 net parcel tax and $20.15 user charge for average properties. Commercial rates would be proportionately higher.

Singers Injured

Minor injuries were suffered by 12 members of the Arion Male Voice choir when the bus they were passengers in collided with a lamp post in the Town and Country shopping centre.

John McVie, a member of the choir, said the group was returning from the B.C. Kiwanis Festival at the Queen Elizabeth Theatre in Vancouver and had stopped to drop off a few passengers when the mishap occurred.

Saanich police said the bus swerved to avoid hitting a car backing out of a parking space and hit the lamp standard. The driver was James Swain.



SAANICH PARKMEN, over the past dry weeks, have systematically been burying $10,000 in the ground at Lambrick Park. The money is represented by the elaborate base and drainage network for an eight-lane bowling green at the Gordon Head park. Carpenter Ned Boatness drives in a stake holding forms for the concrete gutter which surrounds the site. Still undecided is whether the municipality or a bowling club will operate the green. (John McKay photo.)

Ask the Times

Q. Can you tell me if there is any connection in the naming of Mary Tod Island and Nancy Hanks Street in Saanich with Abraham Lincoln? —R.J.

A. There is no connection with Lincoln in the naming of Mary Tod Island. It was named by John Tod, a Hudson's Bay official, who served on the Legislative Council of Vancouver Island from 1851 to 1858, retiring as a gentleman farmer in Victoria. He named the island after his daughter in 1856. She later married John Bowker, after whom Bowker Street and Creek are named.

In the early 1900s Dr. Simon Fraser Tolmie and some others planned to build a race track in that area. It was never finished although part of it ran along where Kisber Avenue lies today. Tolmie had a race horse, bought in the United States, called Nancy Hanks. The road is named after his horse.

As Long as It's Par, Merchants Happy

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

The Canadian dollar has floated almost to par with U.S. currency — and Victoria merchants hope it stays that way during the tourist season.

The exchange rate, particularly when the Canadian dollar rises above the American, becomes a major problem in dealing with visitors.

For public relations reasons as well as for convenience, merchants prefer to deal with U.S. cash on an even basis.

Victoria banks report the Canadian dollar at 100.15 against the American or about one-eighth of one per cent.

For the difference in rate plus handling charges, banks are charging merchants 50 cents on each $100 of American money.

GOODWILL

Peter Tredgett, a director of the Victoria Visitors and Convention Bureau, said most merchants consider fractional losses as a write-off to goodwill.

When the rate goes to one per cent or higher, however, merchants charge the difference.

An effective rate of 0.6 per cent would be considered par, a rate of 1.2 per cent would be considered one per cent.

He said the volume of American money in July and August was too heavy to consider offering par when the effective bank rate goes above one per cent.

There have been some cases of American tourists getting par under such circumstances but this is more likely to be a merchant unaware of the changed dollar rate or an employee acting on his own.

Generally, almost all merchants follow the policy of collecting one per cent and above and paying one per cent and below.

HUGE FLOW

Victoria banks confirm that the flow of American money into the city is phenomenal during July and August.

Large bills and travellers' cheques are usually brought directly to the banks by tourists but most of the small bills — the bulk of the money — is brought in by Victoria merchants.

This creates a large surplus of American funds and banks find themselves shipping it to the United States every week to get Canadian cash.

This export of U.S. funds is the reverse of the situation in January.

In winter there is a shortage of U.S. money as Canadians are buying it up for trips to Hawaii or California and there are few Americans spending money in Victoria.

This creates a need to import some American cash.

About this time of year the banks reach a state of equilibrium, with supply and demand for U.S. cash evening out. It lasts from 30 to 60 days, however, and then the big surpluses begin to pile up.

Although the banks could not supply dollar totals, they report the stack of surplus U.S. funds in summer indicates that the city's tourist industry is thriving.

And store transactions will go more smoothly if the dollar continues at par.

Whalers Blow The Jets Down

WINNIPEG (CP) —John French sat in the dressing room with a smile on his face and said he was "lucky and good" to score the winning goal Wednesday night as New England Whalers whipped Winnipeg Jets 7-4.

The win gave the Whalers a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven World Hockey Association final series for the World Trophy. Third game will be played tonight in Winnipeg.

French, a native of Orillia, Ont., scored two goals in the final 20 minutes as the Whalers rallied for five unanswered goals in the third period.

"We were confident we could come back after that second period," French said in the happy Whalers' room. "We figured if we got a quick one we'd have them.

Defenceman Jim Dorey started the third-period eruption, finishing off a good passing play with Tom Williams and Tom Webster at 2:19. Brit Selby tied the score at 4-4 49 seconds later.

He teamed with Williams and Webster and passed the Jets dizzy before Selby slapped the puck into the open net behind a baffled Ernie Wakely.

"I was lucky and good on that goal. I was in the right spot and Ricky (Ley) hit my stick with his shot."

John Cuniff made it 6-4 before French completed the scoring into an empty net.

Williams in the first period and Brad Selwood in the second got the other New England goals.

"They just overpowered us."

Winnipeg coach Bobby Hull said the Whalers "have too much offensive power, their forwards get in there and blitz us . . . and they know how to put the puck in the net."

"This is the kind of club you can't let up on for one second."

Three visiting athletes who represented Canada at the 1972 Olympic Games in Munich will be featured performers tonight in a special open competition at the fifth annual, All School Relays at Centennial Stadium.

John Hawkins, who placed eighth in the high jump in Munich and has cleared seven feet, one and one-half inches, will be competing against Rick Cuttell, who also was on the Canadian high jump contingent.

Ian Gordon, who was in the Olympic 4 x 400 metre relay, will be competing in the 100 and 600 metre runs.

Meanwhile, Mt. Douglas and defending - champion Oak Bay are tied with 14 points each in the high school section of the All School competition after the lone final of the meet Wednesday — the 4 x 800 metre mixer.

Mt. Douglas "A" finished in 9:07.0 minutes to beat Oak Bay "A" by 47.4 seconds Oak Bay "B" was third, Mt. Douglas "B" was fourth, Belmont "A" placed fifth and Mount View finished sixth. Points are awarded on a 10-8-6-4-2-1 basis.

Mt. Douglas added 11 more qualifiers for final events, giving the school 18 after two days of heats. Oak Bay now has 16, Mount View has 11 and Belmont has 10.

Preliminary heats in the elementary section of the four-day meet began Wednesday and Richmond topped the list of qualifiers with six, one more than Doncaster. St. Patrick's, Happy Valley, Glenlyons and St. Michael's University School all have four qualifiers each.

Seven finals are scheduled for today's events, which begin at 6 p.m.

BOXLA OILERS START WITH DOUBLE VICTORY

Two Victoria clubs, each called Island Pacific Oilers, won season-opening lacrosse games Wednesday at Memorial Arena.

Oilers dropped Nanaimo Falcons 18-15 in the Vancouver Island Intermediate "A" League encounter and the other Oilers topped Saanich 15-13 in the Vancouver Island Intermediate "B" League tussle.

Barry Turner led the "A" Oilers with four goals while Bruce Lubinich had three and Tej Labh and Mark Schoor added two each. Jeff Frketich and Jeff Rangers fired five goals apiece for Nanaimo.

Kevin Green, Dale Kilpatrick and Gord Shelley each connected for three goals to pace the "B" Oilers while Paul Hawkes was high scorer for Saanich with four goals.

Hockey: The Russians Were Untypical Types

Watching Ken Dryden tend goal so ably for the Montreal Canadiens in the current Stanley Cup playoffs recalled the reading of his book on the Team Canada — Russia hockey series of last fall.

Because in what he likes to call "a diary" Face-Off at the Summit (Little, Brown and McLellan Stewart), Dryden shows he is much more than the usual jock, and makes several interesting points.

He suggests that Team Canada really wasn't as dirty a hockey team as painted, or that the tactics employed by some of the players weren't really that crude or intimidating in light of what the players learn to expect in the National Hockey League.

He says the way Team Canada played wasn't that much different from the regular NHL games during the season. The difference was that the Russians were not a typical NHL team.

Unlike most NHL players, the Russians rarely retaliated or even defended themselves, Dryden points out. This made the Canadians appear over-aggressive. As a result he feels much of the criticism of the Canadians was unfounded.

The book itself is delightfully different than others in that it gives Dryden's personal thoughts from day to day, and game to game, and if some of his opinions change from chapter to chapter, it's just what he happened to be thinking on that particular day.

The impressions are his alone, although much of the editing was done by Mark Mulvoy of Sports Illustrated, who co-authored the book.

The Dark and The Light

Fortunately, Dryden stays away from the straight statistical approach, listing each incident in the precise order in which it occurred. Rather, he takes isolated events and enlarges upon them as they affected him.

He readily admits that there were moments when life had a dark moment . . . when he wondered if Team Canada would win . . . and what could he do about it? After all, he knew he had played poorly as a loser in games No. 1 and 4 in Canada, and been roundly booed for it.

Of course the ultimate was when he was selected over Tony Esposito of Chicago for the final game; and as a result the tremendous personal challenge he faced. Then, with only 34 seconds to play, the climax! Canada, through Paul Henderson, got the go-ahead goal of the game and the series.

"I set a record for the 180 foot padded skate and joined the mob around Henderson," he writes.

There was another interesting facet of the trip that I thought Dryden explained so well. It concerns the complete approach to coaching in the Soviet Union through the nerve centre of Soviets sports, the famed Institute of Sports and Physical Culture in Moscow.

Sport, and the Entire Body

He says: ". . . What the Russians do well is tap all the available resources and make the perfect, rounded coach. Really there is not just one Tarasov and one Bobrov and one Kulagin in the Soviet Union — but many.

"Thinking about this, I must dispute the charge that once sport is made scientific it no longer is sport," he continues. That's stupid thinking. Sport is much more than just the naked physicality of competition. It DOES involve the mind as well as the body; it not only does, but it should.

"Sport, to me, should develop the entire person. The philosophy of sport seems antiquated in North America while the Russians have modernized everything. Their coaches and athletes understand the reasons for doing things. Over here we are told to do something, and we do it, without any explanation of purpose.

"All in all, it seems pretty logical that the more you know about your body, and the more you know about playing your sport, then the better person, and the better athlete you will be."

Dryden then added that contrary to popular belief, the Soviets couldn't have been more accommodating and he suggested he would like to spend a month or two there and take part in the curriculum.

"We should study their techniques and method," he says, "for it is the prime area where we in North America have been totally backward. We do have a lot to learn."

Cepeda Still Enjoying Hitting Assignments

By The Associated Press

Anywhere Orlando Cepeda hangs his bat is home.

Long a muscleman in the National League, the "Baby Bull" has found a home, and a new life, in the American League as a designated hitter with Boston Red Sox.

Cepeda continued to flourish in his new surroundings with his sixth home run of the year, a grand slam, that helped the Red Sox beat Texas Rangers 6-2 Wednesday night.

"Every homer feels good," said Cepeda about his dramatic shot that capped a five-run third inning. "But home runs don't mean anything unless you win.

"Tonight we won and I'm thankful for the other players."

Cepeda, 35, was supposed to be washed up because of bad knees. He was released by Oakland Athletics after last year, but the Red Sox signed him after the designated hitter rule was put into effect during the winter.

The grand slam Wednesday night was the ninth of his career, which included stints with San Francisco Giants, Atlanta Braves and St. Louis Cardinals in the National League.

In other American League games Wednesday Kansas City Royals beat New York Yankees 4-3, California Angels defeated Detroit Tigers 5-3, Oakland beat Milwaukee Brewers 7-3 in 10 innings, Cleveland Indians turned back Minnesota Twins 8-4 in 10 innings and the Chicago White Sox blanked Baltimore Orioles 4-0.

Cepeda is hitting at a hot .347 average with 25 hits, four of them doubles. He has knocked in 17 runs and scored 12.

Dave Concepcion, who hit only two home runs during the entire 1972 season, banged out No. 3 of the present campaign to power Cincinnati Reds to a 6-1 rout of the New York Mets in National League play.

Concepcion credits a switch from a 34-ounce bat to a 31-ouncer for his new-found power.

In other National League games, St. Louis Cardinals beat San Diego Padres 5-4, Montreal Expos defeated Atlanta Braves 3-2, Pittsburgh Pirates nipped San Francisco Giants 2-1, Los Angeles Dodgers downed Chicago Cubs 4-1 and Houston Astros beat Philadelphia Phillies 9-4.

Hawks Are Hurting

CHICAGO (CP) — Chicago Black Hawks are back on home ice for the third game of the Stanley Cup finals tonight but any advantage they might have gained from the shift seemed certain to be offset by injury problems.

A decision on whether Stan Mikita would play was to be made by Chicago coach Billy Reay today.

Defenceman Doug Jarrett is also hurting and his availability remained in doubt.

The Black Hawks go into tonight's game trailing Montreal Canadiens 2-0 in the best-of-seven National Hockey League final series, their ranks riddled with injuries that show little promise of improving.

Mikita has a cut middle finger on his right hand, suffered in the first game Sunday at Montreal and he sat out Tuesday's game. Jarrett, a solid performer on the blueline, cracked a rib early in Tuesday's game when he fell with Rejean Houle of the Canadiens on his back.

Reay, who already is shorthanded on defence with Keith Magnuson nursing a fractured jaw, said he's not counting on either veteran for tonight's contest which begins at 5:30 p.m. PDT.

"Mikita's finger is very sore," Reay said. "We found out it wasn't broken, but it seems to be affecting the whole hand."

In addition to Mikita and Jarrett, the Hawks definitely won't start Magnuson who has been out since suffering a fractured jaw early in the semi-final with New York Rangers.

Reay said he planned to dress defenceman Len Frig, up from Dallas Black Hawks of the Central Hockey League for tonight's contest. Another Dallas player, winger Dave Dryskow, may also dress.

Mikita said after a team meeting Wednesday his finger felt much better.

The Chicago coach said the longer the playoffs go, the more the odds should lean toward Montreal.

Zuger New Rookie in Detroit

DETROIT (AP) — A coffin-corner kick is as rare in the National Football League as a 33-year-old rookie, but Detroit Lions have both right now.

The "rookie" is Joe Zuger, a Lions draft choice in 1962 who decided to skip the Detroit cats and head north to Hamilton Tiger-Cats in the Canadian Football League. He spent 10 years there, first as a linebacker and then as a quarterback-punter.

A coffin-corner kick is almost a lost art in the NFL, one Zuger says he'd like to revive since putting a punt out of bounds on the opposition's two-yard line gives them the ball on the two. If the punt goes into the end zone, however, the receivers take it at the 20.

Zuger's quarterbacking was good enough to take the Tiger Cats to five Grey Cup championship games and they won three of them.

And as a punter, which is the talent Lion coach Don McAfferty is interested in, he averaged 45.5 yards and led the league four seasons.

Zuger will be one of 24 players reporting to McAfferty tonight for a two-day orientation.

Zuger had planned to come to the Lions last season but ran into a new NFL rule which prohibits players joining the NFL if they have played with or even participated in a CFL team's training camp during the same season. Zuger had attended the Ticats camp last summer and therefore had to wait a year before moving here.

Zuger says his shoulder is in good shape again and says he sees no problem in adapting his kicking to the NFL style.

Qualifying Sequence An Omen for Lorna?

Thirteen has proved a lucky number for bowler Lorna Pollock.

Lorna qualified on the 13th week for the 10th annual Times Bowler-Of-the Week rolloffs, which are being held at 1:30 p.m. next Sunday at Mayfair Lanes.

And her 246-183-201—630 series was the highest of the 26 women's tenpin qualifiers.

Men, who will also compete at the same time and place Sunday, and women tenpinners qualified for the annual rolloffs by posting the highest weekly three-game series on lower Vancouver Island lanes during the 26-week Times-sponsored contest.

A three-game scratch series will be played in the rolloffs and champions will receive Times Trophies, plus a bonus prize of $100 for each champion who is a daily subscriber to the Victoria Times.

Mrs. Pollock, who won the women's tenpin bowler-of-the-year title in 1970, is one of four former champions trying to become the first to win for a second time.

Ollie Rutledge, champion in 1965, didn't wait long to qualify this year. She topped opponents with a 588 series in the first week of the contest.

The other former champions competing again are Muriel Dodsworth (1968), who qualified in the fourth week with a 609 series, and Peggy Parsons, who won the title as Peggy Trickett in 1966. Mrs. Parsons qualifed with a 607 series in the 21st week.

Other fine efforts during the contest were a 155-246-213—614 series rolled by Pat Metcalfe in the 15th week and Carol Newcomb's 225-202-185—612 series in the 19th week.

Bassett Group Buys Nationals' Franchise

TORONTO (CP) — "Toronto somethings," formerly known as Ottawa Nationals, still haven't an arena to play in but the World Hockey Association club's new owners said Wednesday they'll soon have a new building of their own.

John F. Bassett, head of a group of 21 Toronto sportsmen and businessmen which calls itself Can Sports Inc., officially announced purchase of the hockey club and tentative plans for building a new arena which will compete with Maple Leaf Gardens in the field of hockey and other entertainment.

"We're not at war with Maple Leaf Gardens—there is no feud between Bill Ballard and myself," Bassett told a news conference.

"But when we get our new arena built, we'll be interested in other promotions besides hockey. We'll try to bring in as many good shows as we can."

Bassett said Ballard, vice-president of the 40-year-old Maple Leaf Gardens, had offered the Gardens as a home base for the WHA team "but I don't visualize that."

"I'd rather play somewhere else even with less seats where we could establish ourselves. When people think of the Gardens, they think of the Leafs."

Bassett said one possible temporary home for the club may be the 5,000-seat Varsity Arena.

Bassett's group bought the franchise from Buffalo businessman Nick Trbovich who becomes a member of the new company. Purchase price was not announced but Bassett said it was less than $2 million. Earlier, Trbovich was reported to have turned down an offer of $1.5 million.

Bassett said the team still did not have a new nickname but they would be called the "Toronto somethings" and general manager Buck Houle and coach Billy Harris would retain their positions.

Earlier, Bassett's group had sought an agreement to house the hockey team at the city-owned Canadian National Exhibition Coliseum which would have needed extensive renovations. But the Metropolitan Toronto parks committee last month ruled against the proposal and Bassett withdrew it.

Doug Michel of Toronto, who founded the team in Ottawa last year after paying the initial $25,000 franchise fee, retains an interest with Trbovich.

Don Regan, the WHA's secretary and general counsel, told the news conference:

"It's quite possible this will be the only change in our league cities this year," said Regan.

"There may be one other but otherwise the teams will stay where they are." He declined to say which other franchise might be moved.

Bassett, 34, is also a director of Toronto Argonauts in the Canadian Football League, a team owned by his father, John W. H. Bassett. The younger Bassett is also a vice-president of television station CFTO in Toronto.

Bassett first showed his interest in hockey when, while working as a reporter for the Victoria Times, attempted to bring a Western League franchise to the Vancouver Island city early in the '60s. He was unsuccessful, but Toronto Maple Leafs moved their Denver franchise to Victoria the following season.

Plante Flees Bruin Nest, Leaving Sinden Sizzling

QUEBEC (CP) — Jacques Plante is a member of the Quebec Les Nordiques family and Harry Sinden is a little upset about the whole thing.

Plante, 44, one of the game's outstanding goaltenders and the first netminder ever to wear a face mask on a regular basis, Wednesday signed a 10-year contract as coach and general manager of Les Nordiques of the World Hockey Association.

Plante closed out his 18-year National Hockey League career with Boston Bruins, who acquired him from Toronto Maple Leafs March 3, a deal that helped the Bruins to a second-place finish in the NHL's East Division.

It was hoped that Plante would be back with the Bruins for the 1973-74 season and Sinden, managing director of the club, had said earlier this week the veteran goalie would return to Boston.

"I talked with Jacques Friday and he told me: 'Give me a good deal and I'll stay.' We gave it to him and we were counting upon him to play about 30 games for us next year. Then I began hearing reports and called him Tuesday.

"He told me not to worry, our deal still stood. Now I get this news. He probably had the contract with the other team when he talked to me. If that's true, I never want to speak to him again."

Plante becomes the third coach of Les Nordiques. Maurice Rocket Richard, one-time team-mate of Plante's with Montreal Canadiens, was Quebec's initial coach. He resigned early in the year and was replaced by Maurice Filion, who moved into the position from his chief scout's post. Filion now will return to that position.

Marius Fortier, general manager of the club this season, will be a vice-president in the organization.

Plante told a news conference Wednesday that he would like to be a playing coach with Quebec but said he could not because he still has one year remaining in his contract with the Bruins.

A native of Shawinigan Falls, Que., Plante broke into the NHL with Montreal in 1952-53 in the late stages of the season and was a member of the Canadiens' Stanley Cup-winning squad that year.

He was also a big factor in the Montreal machine that captured five straight Stanley Cups from 1956 to 1960.

During his career with the Habs, he won the Vezina Trophy as the NHL's top goalkeeper six times.

With the Bruins, Plante won seven games and lost one to close out the regular schedule and only was scored on 16 times.

His magic ran out in the playoffs as the Rangers popped 10 goals past him in the first two games of their quarter-final series, enabling New York to win the first two games in Boston. Plante was benched for the balance of the series.

Molsons, Birds Meet in Playoff

Third place in the Pacific Coast Soccer League and a chance to play on their home ground in the playoffs are Saturday's targets for Victoria Gorge Molsons.

But to get both, Molsons must beat University of British Columbia Thunderbirds in a sudden-death playoff game at 7 p.m. at Royal Athletic Park. Gorge and UBC finished regular league play in a tie for third place behind champions Westminster Blues and second-place Victoria West-United.

Traditionally, the first and second-place clubs get the right to home grounds for the sudden-death semi-final playoffs, which will be played May 12 and 13.

But if Molsons can finish third, they will meet West-United at Royal Athletic Park — home ground for both Victoria clubs.

Sandy's Runners Win

Times News Services

Former Victoria players came in for a share of glory on the hockey playoff front Wednesday.

Enjoying it most was Sandy Hucul, one-time Victoria defenceman who came up with his first success as coach when Phoenix Roadrunners defeated Salt Lake City Eagles 6-4 to wrap up the Lester Patrick Cup and the Western Hockey League championship.

Two other players who make their off-season home in Victoria—defenceman Dave Woodley and forward Bobby Barlow — also shared in Phoenix' success.

At Portage La Prairie, the hometown Terriers deadlocked the best-of-seven western tier two junior final 3-3 with a 5-3 victory over Penticton Broncos.

Dean Magnus, who played the 1971-72 season with Victoria Cougars, killed Penticton's comeback hopes in Wednesday's game with an unassisted goal at 12:26 of the third period.

Trailing 4-0 after the first period and 4-1 after the second, the B.C. champions bounced back into contention with goals by Bob Nicholson and Grant Mulvey nine seconds apart at the start of the third period.

At Norfolk, Va., Cincinnati Swords took the lead in the second period and kept it for good to defeat Virginia Red Wings 5-1 and win their American League Calder Cup semi-final playoffs, 4-2.

At Thunder Bay, Orillia Terriers scored three unanswered third-period goals en route to a 4-2 win over Thunder Bay Twins to square the best-of-five Eastern Allan Cup final 2-2.

Charlie Cipolla scored the winning and insurance goals for the Terriers after earlier goals by Clark Alexander and Jim O'Brien.

In Toronto, Bruce Boudreau and Bob Daily led the Marlboros to a 5-0 win to tie their eight-point series with Peterborough Petes in the Ontario junior championship series.

Boudreau got three goals and Daily two in the game that had 184 minutes in penalties handed out.

Ticket Prices Soar In Sunderland Pubs

LONDON (CP) — The odds aren't in Sunderland's favor when the Second Division soccer team meets Leeds United in the English Football Association Cup final Saturday.

A Second Division team hasn't won the Cup since 1931—that was West Bromwich which gained promotion to the First Division in the same season. It's also been nine years since a Second Division club has reached the final.

However, Sunderland received good news Wednesday when three injured players were reported fit for the important game at Wembley Stadium.

Saturday's FA Cup final will be broadcast live over CBU Radio, starting at 7 a.m. Television coverage will be delayed one week, with the telecast scheduled for 2 p.m. May 12 on channels 2 and 6.

Sunderland, a once-great club which won the Cup in 1937 but dropped to the Second Division three years ago, is making a spectacular comeback. The people of the port and ship-building centre on Tyneside in northeast England are in a state of excitement.

The problem is to get a ticket for Wembley. There is always a sellout crowd of 100,000 for the final, with all seats sold months in advance.

Both teams in the final get a big allocation, but it's not enough to satisfy soccer-crazy Sunderland. Ticket touts in Sunderland pubs were reported offering $7.50 tickets for sale at $125.

Leeds, last year's cup winner, is rated 1-3 favorite.

Leeds has a big advantage in experience. But the club is aiming for two cups—the FC and the European Cup of Cup winners—and Sunderland fans hope Billy Bremmer and his men will crack under the strain of a heavy season.

Phillies Trade Johnson

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — First baseman Deron Johnson, with 10 years' experience in major-league baseball, was traded Wednesday by Philadelphia Phillies of the National League.

Johnson, 33, who was hitting .167 in 12 games for the Phils this season, was sent to Oakland Athletics of the American League for minor-league outfielder-third baseman Jack Bastable.

Bastable, Oakland's eighth-round draft pick last year, will be assigned to Philadelphia's Rocky Mount club in the Class A Carolina League.

To fill Johnson's spot on the roster, the Phillies picked up Mike Rogodzinski from their Pacific Coast League farm club at Eugene. Rogodzinski was the Phils' leading hitter in spring training with a .345 average.

Johnson, who has played for the New York Yankees, Kansas City Athletics, Cincinnati and Atlanta, has a lifetime batting average of .251 and has hit 194 career home runs.

Two years ago, he was Philadelphia's leading power hitter with 34 homers and 95 runs batted in. Last season, he was off to his best start in his four years with the Phils when he was struck down with a mysterious ailment of his left leg, diagnosed as peroneal palsy. The affliction hampered him the rest of the season.

Prairie Clubs Won't Try for Title

EDMONTON (CP) — Teams in the Western Major Fastball League have agreed they will not compete in the Canadian amateur softball championships this season.

The association had said earlier the league would be regarded as amateur until "proof of professionalism" was presented.

The league, which consists of teams in Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Regina, Edmonton and Calgary, has billed itself as a professional organization since it began Feb. 11.

The Alberta and Saskatchewan clubs have been prevented from competing in senior playdowns in their own provinces, but the Winnipeg club — the Colonels — has permission from the Manitoba Softball Association to do so.

However, the Winnipeg team, even if it decides to compete in and win the championship of their own province, would not be allowed in the Canadian championship.

Larry Skinner of Winnipeg, director of the softball association, in a letter to Des Archer of Calgary, commissioner of the Western League, said such competition would only be permitted when all teams are affiliated with "all" their individual provincial associations. Skinner said the teams would also have to follow the bylaws and operating rules of the softball assocation.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 26-year-old man, charged under two aliases, Wednesday was sent to jail for two years after pleading guilty to breaking into a Victoria school and stealing a rented car.

Bernard J. Rousseau (real name John George Reti) admitted stealing a $3,000 Chevelle from the Victoria branch of Avis Rent-a-Car between April 15 and 26.

He failed to return the car, after paying a $60 deposit April 15.

On April 29, John Richard Horne (John George Reti) was found hiding under a couch in the medical room of S. J. Willis School.

Reti told Judge William Ostler he "had no idea" why he had broken into what the judge called "an unproductive place" for a thief.

Reti was jailed two years for breaking and entering with intent and a two-year concurrent term for car theft.

★ ★ ★

A 16-year-old, whose charges were transferred from family to provincial court April 18, was sent to jail for five months definite, five months indeterminate by Ostler.

Wayne Robert Brooks, 1450 Myrtle, pleaded guilty to two counts of car theft and one of possession of a stolen car.

The car thefts took place Feb. 19 and April 12 in Victoria. Between these dates, Brooks and six friends were picked up by Burnaby RCMP in a stolen car Feb. 27.

Ostler recommended that the youth spend his sentence in a forestry camp.

Alex Nemeth, 25, of Port Alberni, was found guilty of assaulting a police officer, following a fight in Esquimalt April 22. He was fined $300 by Judge F. S. Green.

★ ★ ★

In traffic court, John William Adderson, 43, of HMCS Qu'Appelle, was fined $350 by Judge Harold Alder after pleading guilty to impaired driving.

Rescued 200 Cyprus-Bound

NICOSIA (Reuter) — More than 200 passengers and crew taken from the burning Greek ferry Knossos during the night were heading for Cyprus today aboard the Italian ship that rescued them.

The ship, the Stelvio, was due in Limassol later today to put ashore 157 passengers and 45 crew members from the Knossos.

Second Pipeline Urged

WASHINGTON (CP) — After describing Canada as a "political quagmire," Senator Henry Jackson, chairman of the Senate interior committee, today called for swift negotiations "leading to agreement on construction of a second pipeline" across Canada.

"It is clear that the proposal for another oil pipeline across Canada to the U.S. Midwest has merit but I do not regard it as an acceptable alternative to the trans-Alaska pipeline because of inevitable delays and uncertainties connected with the Canadian route," the Washington state Democrat said.

"I believe the administration should begin now to take steps including the necessary negotiations with Canada leading to an agreement on the construction of a second pipeline across Canada.

"Meanwhile, we should move rapidly to resolve the legal and political obstacles to the one pipeline that is ready to be built, the trans-Alaska project," Jackson said during the second day of committee hearings on the issue.

He tangled verbally with Senator Walter F. Mondale (Dem.—Minn.) over Mondale's argument favoring construction of a trans-Canada route first. Jackson said one of the chief problems was to amend the U.S. Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 to permit right of ways wider than the 54 feet allowed under the act.

City Doctor Probes Emergency Service

A specialist in pediatrics, Dr. Peter Ransford of Victoria has been commissioned by the provincial government's health security program project to undertake a review of all emergency health services in British Columbia.

Project director Dr. Richard Foulkes said Ransford's study will cover all aspects of the emergency health services in the province, including standards of emergency vehicles, training of ambulance attendants and paramedics, the emergency departments of general hospitals and the capability of major hospitals to handle various types of emergencies.

His review, which starts May 15 and is expected to take about three months, will result in specific recommendations to the government for upgrading present services and providing a province-wide network of high-quality care, Foulkes said.

The study will include the various establishments involved in training ambulance personnel, the B.C. Hospitals Association, committees of the B.C. Medical Association, personnel in private ambulance companies and union representatives.

Ransford, chairman of the BCMA's traffic and safety committee, has a national reputation as a physician with expert knowledge in emergency care.

He is on the emergency services committee of the Canadian Medical Association, a member of an advisory committee to the Canada Safety Council and in 1970 was appointed chairman of a special committee formed by the federal government to investigate the present state of knowledge concerning alcohol and driving in Canada.

He is also on the board of directors of the Traffic Injury Research Foundation of Canada.

Labor Minister Bill King has announced the first of a series of regional meetings on labor-management relations will be held June 15 in Nelson.

The minister will attend, along with senior department officials and his three special advisors on labor law changes. Representatives of labor and management in the Kootenays will also be invited.

Oil Skimmer on Scene

ANACORTES, Wash. (AP) — A $25,000 oil skimmer, designed to pick up 3,000 gallons an hour from the water's surface, has been delivered to Shell Oil's refinery near here.

The skimmer, designed by Shell, can pick up a slick twice as fast as earlier devices, the company said.

The skimmer is the hub of a three-unit system. The other units are a work boat for towing additional equipment, and a barge that holds oil storage bags, each of which has a 250-gallon capacity.

TV Cameras Latest Target In Pollen's Press Battles

First it was newspaper publishers, then it was news reporters.

Now Mayor Peter Pollen's skirmishing with the press has spread to television.

CHEK television news director Mike Adamson has called on city council to clarify its attitude on TV cameras at council meetings because he says Pollen prevented cameramen from filming a council committee meeting April 19.

Subject to approval of city council, Adamson will be informed that any filming of city business is up to the chairman of the individual meeting.

A recommendation by council's inter-governmental relations committee also would have Adamson ask whatever chairman is involved for permission to film on the day before the meeting in question.

In his letter to council, Adamson said Mayor Pollen had on Feb. 21 forbidden film at a public hearing on the Bay Village Shopping Centre issue. Subsequently, however, the cameras were tolerated at the hearing and Adamson said the mayor changed his position, saying cameras were welcome to cover any city business.

"As a result of the mayor's interference in our attempts to report developments of that (April 19) meeting, it has become obvious to me that verbal carte-blanche from His Worship is grossly inadequate," Adamson wrote.

"May I suggest that . . . (film coverage) policy be decided by council and not solely the mayor?"

Discussing the letter today, Ald. Percy Frampton suggested prior notification: "There's a certain disturbing element when all the lights come in."

Mayor Pollen: "It's entirely up to the chairman."

Ald. Tom Christie: "The television station just seems to want to cover sensational things. Why can't they be here for regular business like the other members of the press group."

The April 19 meeting which cameras were prevented from filming was a discussion by council's finance committee of issuing a trade licence for an Ultra Love Sexual Pleasure Appliance Store.

According to Adamson, Mayor Pollen told the TV cameraman than he did not want the station to picture "a lot of bald, old men sitting around refusing to give this company a business licence."

The 51 members of the centre taking part in the tour will stay at the Douglas Hotel, 1450 Douglas, for eight days and visit the Silver Threads centre in Centennial Square.

CABINET WILL INCLUDE COMMUNICATIONS POST

POWELL RIVER (CP) British Columbia will have its own minister of transportation and communications, probably by the end of the year, Premier Dave Barrett announced Wednesday before about 250 persons at an NDP banquet.

The premier would not elaborate, but said more details will be coming "within a few weeks" when he announces a "cabinet reshuffle."

"It is important that this province, being so far-flung, develop a better system of communications between our people."

Jim Lorimer now holds portfolios responsible for municipal affairs and commercial transport. Presumably, Barrett intends to relieve him of the commercial transport portfolio, giving it to a person who will not only have greater responsibilities for transportation, but also for the over-all communications system in B.C.

Barrett said the specific priorities of the new ministry will not be announced until the minister is appointed.

When asked if creation of the new ministry has anything to do with the government's announced intention to take over B.C. Tel, he replied only "not necessarily," but then paused and added "at this time."

The premier also told an angry resident of Sechelt, who complained that property owners in the area were consistently rejecting a new recreation centre, that amendments to the Municipal Act will be brought in this fall allowing non-property owners to vote on money bylaws.

Vern Minow in 1966 and today

Minow Puts It to Music

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

It's five years since Vernon Minow was last in Victoria — an ex-con who had kicked the drug habit after 16 years — trying unsuccessfully to establish a Halfway House on Rockland for those of his background.

Then he was an impassioned man, pleading for his "kids" both here and in the Halfway House he started in Vancouver.

He's still impassioned but now he says it with music.

His outward appearance, too, has gone through a turnabout since he headed for Hollywood, began writing songs and ended up forming his own recording company, Little Elf Records, along with partner Michael Mancha.

White lacey ruffles and a silk powder blue suit, teamed up with long hair have taken the place of the business suit and conventional haircut.

He drives a long sleek limousine equipped with its own telephone. The eight-track tape plays his own recordings.

Minow and Mancha are here to promote their latest album, In the Portrait of My Mind, which Minow says was inspired by the generosity of Victorians and people in Vancouver during the days he was struggling to get Halfway Houses established.

"My love for the people of Vancouver and Victoria is in this album," he says, "they helped make these houses a reality."

There's an evangelistic gleam as he reports there are now 600 Halfway Houses in the United States and about 100 in Canada.

There's also traces of homesickness:

"I intend to come back to Canada," he says, "there's no place like it. I'm going to start a Canadian company and will register it in Vancouver next week."

Since he became a music man, more than 200 tunes have been turned out by Minow. Some of the better known are My Garden of Blue, Travelling Man and There Must be a Softer Word than Goodbye.

Settling in Victoria or Vancouver, Minow says he will continue to write.

He has other ambitions:

"I want to start another kind of Halfway House, this time for underprivileged kids who need a hand to get going."

Before returning to California he intends to visit the "boys" at the Halfway House he started on the mainland.

He also intends to see a couple of the social workers who helped make his dream come true:

"Premier Dave Barrett and Norman Levi (minister of rehabilitation) really helped me in those days."

What steered him to music and success?

"I owe it to Halfway House. It helped me to evaluate life and go on to be a free person."

$1 Million For Schools

EDMONTON (CP) — The Alberta government will provide a fund of one million dollars a year to assist elementary school children with learning disabilities, says education minister Lou Hyndman.

Hyndman says the money will go to 100 rural and urban school jurisdictions not included under other recently-announced programs.

The fund, to be known as the learning disability fund, will set aside an allotment for each jurisdiction to cover reimbursement for professional services rendered to individual students.

Sixteen districts in the Red Deer region and 24 in the Peace River region are taking part in previously-announced government-financed regional programs.

The fund will provide money for learning disability diagnosis, remediation and speech therapy, and program prescription. Most of the actual treatment would take place in the school, using individualized programs developed by specialists in the field.

North Park Gets $660,587

North Park Manor, a $1.9 million senior citizens' apartment development, will receive the one-third provincial grant under the Elderly Citizens' Housing Aid Act fund which this year totals more than $8.8 million.

The 15-storey housing development is being built under the auspices of First Baptist Church which donated the project site at the corner of North Park and Quadra.

It will house 175 senior citizens in 25 double suites at $92 a month and 125 single units at $75 a month.

Designed by Wade, Stockdill, Armour and Blewett architectural firm, the project will be open to senior citizens with limited income, regardless of religious denomination.

North Park Manor Society, a non-profit organization created by First Baptist Church to take over responsibility for the project, will get further financing from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Tax Boosts Cost — MP

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Continuation of the sales tax on building materials is a contributing factor to pricing houses beyond the reach of average Canadians, Eldon Woolliams, Progressive Conservative housing critic in the party's caucus, said Wednesday.

The paramount consideration in Canada is to produce houses at a price which Canadians can afford, he said.

Woolliams was commenting on the refusal of Urban Affairs Minister Ronald Basford to reduce or eliminate the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. The Conservative member said he was very disappointed that the minister refused to reply positively to the Canadian Labor Congress on this question.

His position on the sales tax completely contradicts the public, co-op housing and rehabilitation proposals in recent government legislation, Woolliams said in a statement.

In a letter to the president of the CLC made public Tuesday Basford argued the reduction or elimination of the sales tax on building materials would lead to inflation, Woolliams said. The minister had contended the housing industry is now operating at a high level of output and that increased output would cause inflationary pressures because of potential shortages of skilled workers and essential building materials.

Woolliams took issue with this position. He said the philosophy of the government appeared to be that such taxes are useful to abate demand in areas where greater demand would induce cost-push inflation because of scarce or rigid supplies, labor, materials and capital.

This approach is both unacceptable and ill-advised. The 11 per cent sales tax is not dampening demand for housing — an essential and scarce commodity — it is simply another contributor to housing costs, said Woolliams.

The member said only 6 per cent of wage earners now can afford to purchase a home. That must be changed by reducing costs.

To reduce housing costs the government should eliminate the sales tax on building materials. It is an unwarranted and hurtful cost and nothing more. In addition, potential scarcities in skilled trades and essential building materials can and should be met by government action and should not be used as an excuse for accepting this present situation, said Woolliams.

Nutrition Course Repeated

A five-day nutrition and weight control program is being repeated next week at the Health Education Centre, 3019 Shakespeare St.

The course, first given in April, aims at helping participants keep slim and in good physical condition without on-again off-again dieting.

Instructors will discuss good nutrition of adults, children and the elderly, as well as stress control. Doctors, nurses, health educators and physical education instructors will be giving the course.

The course starts Sunday, May 6, at 7:30 p.m. and continues for four more evening sessions at the centre. The class is limited to 60.

BANK ROBBERY SMALL RECORD

PANORAMA CITY, Calif. (UPI) — A little man with a big moustache, small ambitions and a thing for $20 bills went into the record books of crime Tuesday.

He handed a note to a teller at a Crocker Bank branch here that read: "I have a gun. Give me all your twenties in this envelope."

The teller said she had only two bills of that denomination.

"I'll take it," he said.

Short-Changed by Gov't, Pensioners Complain

An organized group of about 200 old age pensioners met some members of the legislature Wednesday afternoon. The group later held a meeting with officials of the provincial human resources department.

The members of the Old Age Pensioners Organization of B.C. were greeted by Public Works Minister Bill Hartley, Scott Wallace (PC — Oak Bay) and Jim Chabot (SC — Columbia River).

The pensioners had come for their third annual mass meeting in Victoria. One of the complaints aired concerned the Mincome cheques they have been receiving, some of which have not included the guaranteed $200-a-month income promised by the provincial government.

Human Resources Minister Norman Levi, who was scheduled to meet the pensioners, was out of town, and Hartley took his place at a meeting with deputy minister Ray Rickinson and executive assistant Ray Wargo.

Vince Yates, spokesman for the old people, said the group made several requests: Attaching the price of prescription drugs to medical coverage for pensioners under the B.C. Medical Plan; free ambulance services for the elderly; free transportation services throughout the province and a reduction of the $10 annual charge for pensioners' use of B.C. Hydro bus facilities.

Same Firenza Settlement Sought for All

VANCOUVER (CP) — William Grosvenor, director of the British Columbia branch of the Automobile Protection Association, has called on General Motors to provide new cars and cash settlements for all owners of Firenzas.

Last week the president of Dissatisfied Motorists, Robert Moore of Toronto, said he has been offered a 1973 Astre and $380 in exchange for his 1972 Firenza.

"We want the same settlement for every Firenza owner across Canada," Grosvenor said.

PARK MINES BAN

The provincial government has now prohibited exploration and development of existing mining claims inside provincial parks.

A cabinet order released Wednesday rescinds previous orders authorizing limited development of mining claims inside parks. The order prohibits development except where authority has been given by a valid park use permit.

During the legislative session, Resources Minister Bob Williams said mining would not be allowed in the provincial parks.

Another cabinet order confirming a government decision concerns authorization of funds for construction of a dike for the flood-prone Oak Hills subdivision outside Kamloops. The subdivision suffered severe water damage when the waters of the Thompson River overflowed last summer.

The cabinet order authorizes a total of $1.9 million for construction of the dike.

A sum of $400,000 was also set aside through a cabinet order for construction and maintenance of a road in the Omineca area of the province to facilitate exploration of mineral resources.

Alberta Cabinet Ministers To Report Their Holdings

EDMONTON (CP) — Premier Peter Lougheed has directed all Alberta cabinet ministers to disclose publicly their land holdings and other business interests.

Such disclosures would assure public knowledge of any action a minister might take which could conflict with his personal interests, the premier told the legislature.

His statement also required senior civil servants — whose positions might lead them to conflicts of interest — to disclose their interests to the premier. Such disclosures, for the present, will not be made public.

Lougheed recalled the case of D'Arcy McKeough, who resigned as provincial treasurer of Ontario last year after it was disclosed that he owned land near Chatham, Ont., which was affected by a government zoning decision.

Premier William Davis of Ontario afterwards ordered his ministers to disclose their personal interests.

It appeared from assessing the Ontario incident, Lougheed said, "that such public disclosure would significantly reduce the probability of a minister inadvertently making a decision involving a proprietory or business interest with which he or she was involved."

Cemetery Takeover

EDMONTON (CP) — Municipalities would be able to take over neglected cemeteries under a goverrnment bill introduced in the Alberta legislature Wednesday.

This would eliminate the necessity of moving the bodies to another burial ground, said Ken Paproski, (PC—Edmonton Kingsway) who introduced the bill.

Bear Limit Halved

REGINA (CP) — Hunters in Saskatchewan are restricted to one bear for the spring bear season, it has been announced by the department of natural resources.

The department said the limit has been changed to one per hunter from last year's two for conservation purposes.

Trees Not Hardy

EDMONTON (CP) — A company trying to sell Albertans trees for growing McIntosh apples and Bartlett pears has been told by the government "they were not really doing their job from a consumer standpoint."

Consumer Affairs Minister Bob Dowling told the legislature Wednesday the imported trees, shrubs and plants advertised for sale at reduced rates in newspapers were found by the botony department at the University of Alberta to be types "not particularly hardy for the Alberta climate."

'Smutniks' Slammed

WINNIPEG (CP) — Independent MLA Joe Borowski renewed his attacks on Manitoba's new film classification system Wednesday and charged that the government is ignoring federal law by failing to lay charges against obscene films.

Borowski, the member for Thompson, told the legislature that the government is using an "applause meter" approach and will not enforce the law unless there is a public outcry about obscenity.

He described New Democratic MLAs as "smutnicks" and warned that the province faces a deluge of pornography similar to the United States, which he said is "wallowing in filth and garbage right up to its nose."

Under the new film classification law, films cannot be censored or cut, but obscenity charges can be laid under the Criminal Code of Canada.

61,760 Keep Victoria No. 2

Victoria remains the second largest city in British Columbia by population despite the sudden growth of Kelowna and Kamloops earlier this week.

When the boundaries of the two interior cities were officially changed on Tuesday, Kamloops became the largest city in area in the province with 83,255.6 acres and Kelowna became the second largest with 52,556.8 acres.

Vancouver, which had previously been the largest city in both population and area, automatically became the third largest city in area with 28,700 acres.

But Vancouver remains the largest city in population, 426,256 residents, according to the 1971 census.

Victoria's second place is maintained with a population of 61,760 according to the 1971 census. (Victoria is way down the line, however, in geographical size with only 4,700 acres.)

Kamloops is now the third largest city in population with an estimated 55,000 residents.

New Westminster, previously third, is now in fourth place with 42,835.

Kelowna now claims fourth place in the population comparison with the cities of North Vancouver and Prince George following.

The population and area comparisons, however, are somewhat meaningless as many municipal districts, once rural areas, have grown to densely populated suburbs and many, such as Saanich, Burnaby, Richmond and Surrey, are much larger than areas incorporated as cities.

Outdoor Show Opens Tonight In Esquimalt

The Victoria Gymnasts' Association and the Pacific Swim School will give demonstrations during the four-day show which runs until May 6.

Hours are: Thursday and Friday, 6 to 11 p.m., Saturday, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., and Sunday 1 to 7 p.m.

Lenient Uncle Blamed

NANAIMO — Excessive speed and the inexperience of the driver were factors which caused the death of a 15-year-old boy in a car accident here April 20, a coroner's jury found Tuesday night.

Michael Briggs of Nanaimo died after being thrown from a car in which he was a passenger as the vehicle plunged over a 65-foot embankment on Lost Lake Road, north of the city.

Fred Wenman, 15, driver of the car, testified under protection of the Canada and B.C. Evidence Acts that he and a friend were trying to see how fast the car would go.

The car was going about 70 at the time of the accident, he said.

Blame for the accident lies "squarely on the shoulders of the man who gave Wenman the car," Coroner C. F. Newcombe told the inquest.

Wenman's uncle, had given him the car to fix up while he waited for his 16th birthday to be eligible for a driver's licence, the youth testified.

Newcombe said: "There is no question that the young driver is aware of his wrongdoing, but the majority of the blame must fall on the uncle."

"It is reasonable to assume that any young boy would take the car out," he said. Newcombe suggested the car should have been adjusted so it could not have been moved.

BOER WAR VET DIES AT 91

Well-known nationally as a dog breeder and judge, Walter James Pym was buried Tuesday in Hatley Memorial Gardens. He was 91 and a veteran of the Boer and First World Wars.

One of few remaining veterans of the South African war at the turn of the century, Pym had joined up as a boy from his home in Bristol, England, and trained with the Third Prince of Wales Dragoon Guards in The Curragh, south of Ireland.

In Canada after the war, Pym went to Regina in 1912, where he was to stay for 35 years as a CP Railway constable, Regina police detective and city health inspector.

In 1915 he re-enlisted to serve in the First World War with the 195th Battalion in France, returning to Regina at war's end. He retired to Victoria in 1949.

Pym's home address was 668 Ralph and among survivors are daughters Mrs. Vera Hitchens, of Victoria, Mrs. Audrey Peel and Mrs. Grace Thornton, both of Edmonton; eight grandchildren and eight great grandchildren.

SECRETARY'S PAY TOPS CHIEF'S

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Vancouver and District Labor Council Tuesday gave its secretary-treasurer a raise to $15,600 a year plus $1,200 annual car allowance — a lot more than its president gets.

Syd Thompson, who receives no pay as council president and draws about $13,000 a year as head of the 8,000-member Vancouver local of the International Woodworkers of America, said he doesn't oppose the raise for council secretary Jack Lawrence.

"But next year and the year after things will be different," he said. "In my opinion this raise is going to the borderline.

"There's something wrong when union officers are getting paid like the (company) bosses; they'll start living like the bosses.

"We have to keep officers' wages in line with those of the people they represent."

Jack Phillips, chairman of the council that negotiated Lawrence's salary, said the amount represented less than a five per cent increase taking into account changes in fringe benefits.

Murder Trial Ordered

A trial was ordered Wednesday for Jo Ann Brenda Anderson in connection with the death, March 9, of her mother.

She was committed for trial in a higher court early next month before judge and jury, after a preliminary hearing in provincial court.

The mother, Mrs. Shirley Anderson, was stabbed in her home. The daughter was charged with non-capital murder.

The court continued bail of $7,500.

Press Council Urged by Labor Body

A community press council should be established, Victoria Labor Council agreed Wednesday night.

Council delegates approved an executive recommendation favoring a press council and will inform Victoria Times publisher Stuart Underhill and The Daily Colonist publisher R. J. Bower.

In addition, the labor council will seek the support of other organizations for the proposed community press council.

Council secretary Larry Ryan said the proposal "has a little to do with the Collins case," referring to the resignation two weeks ago of Colonist columnist Don Collins after he was informed his column would no longer be published.

"Collins obviously was not free to write what he wants. It's an obvious question to be considered by the press council," Ryan said.

The council had written Bower asking why Collins' column was dropped, but received a letter dated April 23 saying Bower was out of town and that the council's letter would be drawn to his attention on his return.

Both Underhill and Bower were out of town today.

Ryan said a press council is "working very well" in England and the Senate committee inquiring into the mass media in Canada had recommended establishment of press councils.

The council would help to make better newspapers, he said, and act as an ombudsman between the public and the newspapers.

"It's awfully difficult to communicate with the publishers," Ryan said, but the newspapers arrive twice daily "on the porch."

He said the council could discuss standards of journalism and noted that both Victoria newspapers are owned by the same company, Victoria Press Limited, which in turn is owned by FP Publications Limited of Winnipeg.

Ryan said press exclusion at some city hall meetings "should be the first item on the agenda" of a press council, which would need cooperation from the publishers in being established.

"We are not in any way suggesting we infringe on the jurisdiction of the Newspaper Guild within Victoria Press," he said, referring to the union which represents newsroom and other non-mechanical employees.

The labor council's decision was opposed by Neil Hindle of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Local 191. He suggested the recommendation be referred back for review by affiliated unions.

"In a free society, the free press itself is its own best guardian," he said.

"Many people may mislead people or tell lies but the press, like the church, is beyond suspicion."

He warned that if a press council is established, "it can be controlled or manipulated. We should be very careful, very cautious."

Flush Toilets Demanded By Contsruction Workers

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia construction unions have launched a campaign to improve sanitary conditions on construction sites.

Specifically they want flush toilets at such sites.

Tony Ceraldi, chairman of the occupational health and safety committee of the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council, said portable outhouses now used across the province are "very nauseating on occasion."

The committee has presented a brief to Health Minister Denis Cocke asking for sanitary urinals, toilets and washroom facilities.

The unions also want legislation requiring an occupational health nurses to be on duty at all construction sites.

In Toronto last week the plumbers' union presented Ontario contractors with a demand in new negotiations for flush toilets and a spokesman described it as a "strike issue."

Ceraldi said B.C.'s 60,000 construction workers affiliated with the council are a long way from striking over outhouses but added they are far from satisfied with the present situation.

N-Medicine Changes

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greater Vancouver Regional Hospital District Wednesdat approved $12,000 for working plans for new nuclear medicine facilities at Vancouver General Hospital. The federal government has ordered the hospital to renovate its nuclear medical facility or lose its licence to operate.

Order Departs

KAMLOOPS (CP) — The Roman Catholic Oblate Order said Wednesday it plans to leave the Kamloops Indian Reserve after 84 years, turning over administratio, of the reserve's school to an Indian.

Rev. Allan Noonan, who has directed the school for the past nine years, said the change-over is just the latest in a series of similar moves in British Columbia.

Vote Ruling Friday

KAMLOOPS (CP) — The decision on the validity of the election of a chief of the Kamloops Indian band will be announced Friday, Kamloops MP Len Marchand said Wednesday.

Marchand, parliamentary secretary to Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien, said in a telephone interview from Ottawa that he will announce the findings of a federal inquiry into the disputed Dec. 21 election of Norman Larue as chief at a press conference here Friday.

Sewage Study Set

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greater Vancouver Regional District Wednesday approved a six-month study — to cost less than $25,000 — of dechlorinating sewage processed at the Lulu Island treatment plant. Sewage is chlorinated to reduce bacteria, but there has been concern expressed about the process causing possible toxicity to fish after treated effluent goes into the Fraser River.

Posed as Intern

VANCOUVER (CP) — Alan Lawrence Wilson, 19, pleaded guilty Wednesday to posing as an intern and assaulting a 12-year-old boy in the Vancouver General Hospital Jan. 10 and Jan. 15. Sentence will be passed June 5.

Holiday for Few

REGINA (CP) — An attempt to have July 4 declared a holiday in honor of Queen Elizabeth's visit to Regina failed to materialize at city council.

However, city hall staff will have the day off, it was decided.

Wedding Shows the Flag

FLETCHER'S ISLAND, N.W.T. (CP) — Canadian sovereignty in the Far North was reaffirmed before 16 bewildered men of a United States naval laboratory when a mountie and his bride showed up in their mess hall to be married.

It was a true wedding in white for RCMP Constable Ross Pollock and Diane Underwood, conducted on a glacial island which is part of the polar ice pack 300 miles south of the North Pole.

In the interests of Canadian sovereignty the RCMP periodically bring the Canadian flag to the area where the U.S. detachment is located. Last week the patrol plane arrived in Resolute Bay about the same time Constable Pollock and Miss Underwood decided to get married.

Constable Pollock had been serving with the Resolute Bay RCMP while Miss Underwood, originally from Vancouver, had been working as a receptionist for an aviation company at Resolute.

They were about to be married among the dreary familiarity of the settlement buildings when Inspector Vic Irving, commanding officer for the patrol, saw a great opportunity to boost Canadian sovereignty and celebrate the RCMP's 100th birthday at the same time.

So he bundled up the constable, the bride, mothers and fathers, fresh flowers flown from Edmonton, champagne, wedding dress and all aboard his noisy Twin-Otter aircraft and set out to complete the strangest patrol Fletcher's Island has ever seen.

They arrived at the 15-mile-long island in the best weather in months—13 degrees below zero and bright sunshine.

But a 10-mile-an-hour wind pushed the chill factor to 40 below zero so the uniformed policemen asked the crew of the naval laboratory if they could use the mess hall.

The crew responded gladly and the entire wedding party, dressed splendidly in white and scarlet, were hauled into the camp on a sled towed by a crawler tractor driven by an Eskimo.

The mess was cleaned quickly, the Canadian flag broken out, and there, in front of 16 men who spend months dreaming of wives and girlfriends back in the States, the only single woman for 550 miles was married.

Replace OAS, Castro Urges

MIAMI (Reuter) — Cuban Premier Fidel Castro has called for a new Western Hemisphere organization, without the United States, to replace the Organization of American States (OAS), which ousted Cuba a decade ago.

Castro, in a two-hour May Day speech on Havana radio monitored here, also renewed his attack on President Nixon, calling him a "reactionary man" and a "defender of the monopolies."

And he repeated that Cuba would not talk to Washington about a renewal of relations until the economic boycott of Cuba is removed.

Crunchy Muffins Best If Bananas on Special

By MARY MOORE

Writing readers want banana recipes. The same requests reached me last year at this time. The supermarket's prices on bananas seem to fluctuate with the whim of the pricing executives. So be it. When bananas are on "special" — sometimes bags of singles that have been knocked off the bunch — buy them and include them in your meals.

Midmorning, Maureen said "I'm dying for some of your goodies. What did you make over the weekend?" I had specialized on meats and vegetables so I dropped my pen and went to the kitchen and made for Maureen.

CRUNCHY BANANA MUFFINS

NOTE: These are excellent for using up overripe bananas. This recipe is similar to one I gave here in February 1969.

⅞ cup mashed overripe bananas (about 2 large or 3 small).
1 egg.
1 tsp. vanilla.
1¼ cups sifted all-purpose flour.
½ cup wheat germ.
1 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. baking soda.
¼ cup water.
¼ cup white sugar.
1 tsp. cinnamon.

Into beater bowl measure the bananas, brown sugar and margarine and beat for 5 minutes. Add egg and vanilla and beat in. Lift up beaters. Add the flour, wheat germ, baking powder and soda and water. Lower beaters and beat five seconds. Remove beaters. Scrape down sides and give one or two stirs.

Spoon into 12 buttered 2½ inch muffin tins (preferably teflon for easy removal). Mix together white sugar and cinnamon and sprinkle carefully and evenly over each unbaked muffin. Bake at 350 deg. Fahr. 15 to 20 minutes. Serve warm from the oven.

Check-Out Speeded

NEW YORK (AP) — National Cash Register Co. introduced a new computer-based electronic checkout system for the supermarket industry Tuesday, to become available next fall. It offers the shopper "faster checkout speeds and greater accuracy," provides price look-up ability if the clerk does not know the price of an item and will aid stores in inventory control, in-store accounting and related matters.

Sex and the Telephone Hangup

When our daughter was two years old, we gave her a toy telephone which featured recorded animal talk. It immediately became her security blanket; she not only jabbered away to the recorded animals during breakfast, lunch, and her bath, but she requested that they hold the line while she took her afternoon nap.

Two years later we gave a similar telephone to our son. Handling it as if it were a land mine, he finally grew bold enough to risk puting the receiver to his ear. At the words "The cow says Moo," he shrieked and threw the telephone through the kitchen window.

The whole trouble is that males lack imagination. Instead of picturing a live person on the other end of the receiver, they regard this calling up of disembodied voices as a sort of electronic Black Mass.

This periodic brush with the occult inevitably unnerves a man. Whenever my husband is forced to call a stranger, he is apt to panic completely, forget who he has called and why, and simply stand there opening and closing his mouth like a goldfish, with the wrong end of the receiver pressed against his ear.

On the other hand, any woman worthy of the name can chat for fifteen minutes with a wrong number. Given someone with whom she shares a common bond, such as the woman whom the bricklayer gave as a reference, the conversation can run to an hour and a half.

While a man may have invented the telephone, you will notice that "Watson, come here, I want you" was the entire content of the first telephone conversation. Not "How are you, Watson? Did Billy get over his cold? Did you hear that the Andersons are separating? By the way, I just ran across a fantastic recipe for lasagna. You take a pound of lean ground beef . . ."

Wine Skyrocketing

NEW YORK (AP) — The price of wine is skyrocketing, says dealer Joe Zemel, because it has become an investment.

"I had two Wall Street guys in my shop the other day," Zemel recalled.

"One bought $12,000 worth of wine, the other $16,000. They're not drinkers, they're investors. They'll just hold it and sell it for profit.

ROBERT KOVACK works in a building supply store, where he readies an electric sander. Many homeowners are finding savings doing their own work — even after cost of tools.

Do-It-Yourself Saves

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Do-it-yourself home projects used to be largely the preserve of hobbyists.

Not any more.

According to local supply dealers homeowners are doing repair and construction projects more of necessity to avoid the high cost of contracting and handyman jobs.

Even so, the homeowner faces ever-rising material costs and a great scarcity of some items such as once-bountiful and cheap native cedar and imported mahogany.

Contract work has gone beyond many people because of labor and lumber costs.

"The only guy hiring a carpenter these days is the specialist who can't drive a nail," said David Cubbon, of Cubbon Building Supplies (1867) Ltd., which specializes in do-it-yourself sales.

He agrees there are more people than ever doing home construction and repair work themselves, mostly through pressure of costs.

Ron Foster, retail sales manager of Doman's Building Supply Centre, agrees there has been a steady increase in Victoria do-it-yourself sales in the last four years.

He cites "an accumulation of factors":

— Cost of labor and materials.

— Creativity inspired by new materials.

Among the latter, consumer-oriented items are prefinished panels and mouldings, ready-to-stick tiles, false brick, "decorator" cork panels, imitation beams and decorative mouldings often stamped or extruded plastic, easily fitted floor coverings and cheaper power tools.

People not only finish off family rooms in the basement, put bedrooms in the attic and remodel bathrooms and kitchens, they add wings to their homes, re-roof, install plumbing and wiring, erect sundecks and carports, build fences and summer cottages.

As always, plywood is a principal time and effort-saving material, despite its comparatively high price around $10 a sheet for common thicknesses.

Cubbon said a lot of cedar was used until recently. But fence construction — a big outlet for cedar — is off these days because prices have doubled.

Four-by-four posts that were selling for about $1.25 are now $2.50 and still rising.

"Anything made of mahogany" is up 20 per cent since January and will go up another 40 per cent by June, Cubbon predicted.

This was because all North American orders for Japanese-produced mahogany had been cancelled while prices are allowed to escalate, Cubbon said.

Particle board recently cost around $6 for a ¾-inch 4x8 sheet. It is now $8 and rising.

Top quality unfinished walnut panels ¾x4x8 sold at about $35 two years ago. It is priced now at more than $50 when available.

Even the lowly plasterboard is up 20 per cent.

PRIDE COUNTS too when you tackle your home improvements — satisfaction of a job well done, a saving of money and something to fill idle time. Projects can be the house interior, exterior or surrounding yard.

Skirt Lengths Dictated In Bank Hiring Policy

TORONTO (CP) — High hemlines are every bit as important as high finance for women employees at one bank in Toronto's downtown financial distruct.

"Before hiring the girls we explain our mini-skirt preference," says staff supervisor Norma Hakomaki. "If they don't like it, they don't have to join the staff."

Branch manager Russell Collier says he is "proud of my girls on the front line. Men and women alike compliment the bank on our girls."

Legs, he says, play a "small but important," part in the hiring of bank staff.

Midi girls are allowed, but personally, Collier says, he thinks they are ugly.

Edward McBride, manager of Toronto-Dominion's main branch in Victoria, said he's never heard of the short-skirt policy. His women employees wear what they like, within reason.

"They must be suitably attired for a business office, according to present day standards," said McBride.

Randy Makes Point During Safety Week

By KIT COLLINS
Times Staff

A 3½-year-old Esquimalt boy named Randy was rushed to Victoria General Hospital Wednesday with cuts and bruises.

Young Randy had been playing with his tricycle on the front porch of his home. Then the tot decided it might be more fun to pedal around on the sidewalk.

He started dragging the trike down the front steps, his mother said, but the bike proved more mobile than Randy.

It led the way and he followed, tumbling down the steps.

The injuries were listed as "minor" and Randy's back at home, now smiling, but with head bandages.

There were 423 children's bicycle accidents during 1972.

And the Capital Region Safety Council has issued a plea to parents to instruct their children on safety rules for bicycles . . . and tricycles.

Locally, bicycle riding instruction classes are offered by the local police forces and the council, but the Child Safety Week messages stress the need for safety at home.

Buying a bike may appear easy but it isn't; there is a lot to consider if you think safety.

—Make sure that the rider can use the brakes safely, especially hand-brakes.

—Avoid any special attachments that make dismounting in a hurry difficult, such as high back rests, long gear-shift handles and extra wide and long handle bars.

—Make sure there is a chain guard.

—Make sure there is good lighting equipment for night riding.

After you have the bicycle check the bike regularly to see that:

—the brakes are adjusted;

—tires are properly inflated;

—all screws are tightened;

—chain guard is effective;

—no spokes are missing or loose;

Even regular wear and tear can lead to equipment failure and endanger the rider. Don't change or exchange bicycle parts; it can make the bike unsafe.

The rules for riding safety are familiar but some are worth repeating for riders of any age:

—Trick riding is definitely "out". It can lead to instant accidents. This includes riding "double" or towing a wagon or someone else.

—Small children must understand safety rules before they are allowed on the roads. Teach the rules clearly. Show them how to ride safely.

Vegetable 'Meats' Rules Drafted

OTTAWA — Draft regulations to allow the all-vegetable wiener, sausage or "burger" to be sold in Canada will be mailed out to industry and consumer groups by the health department early next week.

Under the proposed changes to the Food and Drugs Act, the food industry will be required to add specified nutrients to their products to ensure that the nutritional value of such products at least equals the nutritional value of the all-meat version.

In other words, the all-vegetable wiener will be treated more like bread than meat by the federal health department. Sources in government have revealed that the following vitamins will be required additives to all-vegetable protein meat substitute products: thiamine, riboflavin, niacin, vitamin B-12 (including cobalt), and pyridoxine.

Two essential minerals will be required additives: iron and magnesium.

And, if certain types of vegetable proteins are used in place of meat, then at least two essential amino acids will also be required as additives to the products: lysine and methionine.

In the case of the amino acids, which are the basic building blocks of protein, some vegetable protein sources do not contain all of the essential amino acids. Without all of the essential ones, the others can sometimes go unused.

The proposed regulations will not specify the exact amounts of the various nutrients which must be added in all the cases, ranging from all-vegetable, no meat products to low-vegetable, high meat products.

Rather, the regulations will establish a minimum protein quantity and quality standard which must be met by all products, along with a minimum nutrition rating covering vitamins, minerals, carbohydrates, etc.

Food manufacturers will have to meet these minimum requirements, by adding various specified ingredients if necessary, before the meat vegetable protein products or all-vegetable protein products can be sold as meat substitutes in Canada.

The health department will mail out next week the draft regulations in the form of an information letter to industry and consumer groups. Comments will then be required within four weeks.

With luck, the proposed regulatory changes should come into effect as early as this fall.

Discussions have been underway for almost two years with industry on the new regulations which will allow the addition of vegetable proteins to meat analogues.

But the draft regulations are being rushed through faster than planned as a result of the appearance on the market in three cities of meat-vegetable protein "burger" mixtures, selling at 69 cents a pound.

The U.S. recently introduced new regulations to allow the sale of all or partial vegetable protein meat substitutes. And Canadian pressure for similar changes is mounting, especially in the face of escalating meat prices.

Free for the Asking

If you want your family and guests to keep asking why your beef casserole or pot roast taste so very special, simply add some cocoa.

The attractive 26-page booklet Invitation features over 60 mouthwatering recipes from cakes and cookies, to desserts, fillings and sauces — all calling for the addition of cocoa.

Among the many unusual cakes that may catch your fancy is a Surprise Cake which, in addition to other ingredients, requires 2-3 cup of mayonnaise.

You will also want to try some of the tempting cookie recipes, including the no-bake Chocolate Delights and Chocolate Chews.

In addition to imaginative recipes, the booklet offers useful reference information. For instance, if you don't own a cup for measuring flour, use 16 tablespoons of flour instead.

If a recipe calls for sour milk or buttermilk, you can substitue this with a cup of milk to which one tablespoon of lemon juice or vinegar has been added. Let it stand for five minutes before using.

IODE Chapters Could Founder in Tradition

Its president, Mrs. K. J. C. Dean, of Toronto, acknowledges that in several provinces it threatens to founder in its own traditions, faced with welfare state attitudes and volunteers looking for instant results.

But in the Maritimes, the Imperial Order, Daughters of the Empire is attracting young members who are into with-it activities such as day care, pollution and safety education, self-help projects with Indian reserves.

In Ontario members are also working with Indians, and are startling people who think old orders never change by manning VD information centres.

Mrs. Dean, the youngest president in the Order's history, says the national office is also struggling to find ways to loosen a rigid, traditional administrative structure.

The order's membership has slipped in 10 years from about 29,000 to 21,000 plus 750 members in teen-age junior chapters.

Mrs. Dean, 43, says she believes the reasons lie both inside and outside the organization.

Much of the IODE's energy goes into raising nearly $1 million a year. For years, much of it went overseas, in one form or another, to other Commonwealth countries or to countries such as Korea to alleviate suffering in the aftermath of war or natural disasters.

The IODE has maintained scholarship funds.

In recent years, the national office has supplied 15 incubators to northern stations, and they are now trying to get toys and craft materials to patients in the North.

Mrs. Dean said welfare state citizens say: "Why bother?"

"When we supplied the incubators, some members and other said, 'Why supply them? Let the government do it.' But you can't wait.

"There seems to be an apathy because of the welfare state. People say, 'Is there any need?' Our education people say, 'Is there any need to supply scholarships with all the help the students are getting?' But I think that bit of money can sometimes make the difference between whether a student stays with it or drops out."

Mrs. Dean

Mrs. Dean said she thinks the remoteness of some of the IODE's work also puts people off today.

"The members have worked as hard as any other group, but one-third of the results went outside the country, and some into scholarships. This is not one-to-one work. Today people want to see what they're doing.

I think women are busy today. They want to go out and do their volunteer work and forget about the damn think until next week. They don't want to go to meetings."

She said it is slow work, making changes in an organization that has worked essentially the same way for 72 years, and she hastened to add the older members are not always the ones who try to block change.

"We haven't really been trained to go out and see where the needs lie and how to fulfill them. When we were first organized, the problems came to us.

"Now we are making more emphasis on working in the community.

"I'm convinced what we do is important. I'm also convinced we're a group of women willing to step in and do a job, a tremendous volunteer force.

"We haven't made a definite program, but if we don't make these changes, we're not going to last."

Foursome Boresome

DEAR ABBY: Neil and I have been married for three years. It's the second time around for both of us and I am determined to make a go of this marriage. Neil is 53 and I'm 50.

My problem: Every weekend Neil wants to entertain another couple on our boat. The other couple always turns out to be a cute young female employee and her husband.

Now, I can see that the purpose of these weekend outings is to impress the new employee. But last weekend was the last straw. The girl (about 22) wore skintight pants and a sheer blouse, to show off her figure, which was beautiful. (I am not bad for my age, but I can't compete with that.) My husband kept calling her "Honey," "Doll," and "Babe." The young husband sat like a bump on a log and tried to make small talk with me.

Should I go along with entertaining such couples? We have plenty of friends our own age, but my husband prefers these kids. Please advise me. Jealous in Newport

DEAR JEALOUS: Tell your husband that if he wants to entertain his employees, you will go along with an annual Christmas party, but weekends on a boat with that kind of foursome is boresome.

DEAR ABBY: I cannot tolerate smoke, but it seems the world is geared for smokers. In waiting rooms, and in almost all public places, if the nonsmoker wants to escape the pollution of smokers, he has to find a smoke-free corner where he can breathe some fresh air.

Why don't they post No Smoking signs in all places where people gather, and provide the smokers with a dinky, little, airtight room off to the side somewhere where they can all crowd in together, smoke to their hearts' content, and inhale each other's smoke? Then, the fresh air will be left for those of us who are more deserving of it. Sick of Smokers

DEAR SICK: I'm with you. And to the next smoker who asks me if I "mind" if he smokes, I shall say: "Why don't you do us both a favor and refrain?"

DEAR ABBY: My first letter to any kind of newspaper, but I feel so strongly on the question raised by "Dad in Hackensack," I must express myself. Believe me, the money loaned to anyone in a family (or a friend for that matter) should be accompanied by a cold hard note. It may seem unfriendly, but once it is an established fact, it is the most friendly way to handle a loan, and avoids a lot of problems in the future.

When my husband and I borrowed from our parents, it was a businesslike procedure. True, we paid only 3 per cent interest, and the note was renewed, but it was all on paper in case something happened to any of us.

I know elderly people who have only their pension to live on because they foolishly "loaned" their own children money, never dreaming they needed a note, and of course they never got one penny back.

Please print this, Abby. Some people are much too trusting. Parents

N. Cowichan Vetoes Townhouse Plans

NORTH COWICHAN — Council rejected a land-use contract with developer Henry Yanke of Duncan Wednesday to build 27 townhouses on Marsh Road.

The move came after strong opposition from residents, beginning at a public hearing two weeks ago.

The residents said the proposed development would spoil the environment, overtax already inadequate roads in the area and lead to overcrowded schools.

Spokesman Gordon Carlson, a Marsh Road resident for 18 years, said:

"We are not opposed to housing in the area. The opposition is against the density of population in this area and the proposed density is a bit too far out."

Yanke's lawyer, David Wright of Duncan, contended that pressure for more housing exists across Canada and North Cowichan, because of its desirable qualities, is possibly the fastest-growing area in British Columbia.

Victims Identified

TOFINO (CP) — Police here Wednesday released the names of two persons — one drowned and one missing — who fell into the waters of Tofino harbor when a 12-foot dugout canoe carrying four people capsized.

David Henry Williams, 33, is missing and presumed drowned. The body of Martha Martin, about 70, was recovered by the Coast Guard.

They also found Mr. Williams' father, Henry Williams, 63, alive. The missing man's wife Linda, 30, was pulled out of the water by a Tofino resident. Both survivors were taken to Tofino Hospital.

All four occupants of the canoe were residents of Opitsate Indian reserve which is on an island across the harbor from Tofino.

Law Says He Owns the Road

CAMPBELL RIVER — Ninth Avenue residents here will have free access to their homes, despite a sign threatening that toll fees would be started May 1.

The threat has been withdrawn by local contractor Don Huntley who was protesting a provincial land registry's survey map that places a parcel of land owned by him on top of Ninth Avenue.

"I was just trying to put the government in a position of having to do something — trying to get them off their backsides," Huntley said.

"My fight's with the government — not my neighbors," he said explaining he had no real intention of carrying through with the toll.

The registrar's plan shows his neighbor as having title to the 100 by 200 foot lot, giving Huntley title to the road by error.

Huntley said the land registry and the attorney-general's department have admitted they have registered documents showing it in the wrong place — 40 feet too far south.

"When I bought the property two or three years ago, I checked the titles and Victoria people assured that I owned it.

"It took me a year to find out an error had been made, and I didn't care who was responsible at that point.

"But now we need the property." Huntley specializes in marine docks and home sewage treatment contracting.

Asked what suggestions the provincial government made to him to solve the problem, Huntley said "they said my procedure was to sue my neighbor, and win title to the land and my neighbor can sue the government.

The land was registered as a road, in 1941 and again in 1964.

Scouts to Assist In Recycling Paper

DUNCAN — The Second Quamichan Scout Group hopes to "save" 340 trees by collecting 20 tons of old newspapers in a paper drive Saturday and Sunday.

Scout chairman Bob King said the salvaged newspapers will be recycled. If the scouts reach their quota they will have saved the equivalent of 340 trees from the pulp mills.

King said scouts will not conduct a house to house drive but instead will man a collection depot on Trunk Road, across from the Stone Building. People are asked to bring their papers to the depot tied in bundles.

The scouts' paper drive is a prelude to a monthly "Newspaper Day" planned by Cowichan Recycling, an informal organization which encourages recycling of newspapers and other waste materials such as bottles, tin cans and scrap paper.

Residents who want information about the recycling project may call the scout information line at 746-5710.

2.3-MILL HIKE FOR EDUCATION

DUNCAN — Taxpayers can expect a 2.33-mill increase on their educational tax, finance committee chairman Dave Haywood told a Cowichan school board meeting Monday.

Reasons for the increase, the trustee said, is rising educational costs and the Malaspina Regional College levy.

Haywood said the provincial government policy of helping municipalities meet rising educational costs is helpful, "but nonetheless there are still rising costs.

45-Degree List by Iroquois Called Safe

HALIFAX (CP) — Captain Derroch MacGillivray of the Iroquois, a Canadian Forces destroyer escort, said here the ship took a 45-degree list during sea trials last December, but it was in no danger of capsizing.

"The ship behaved well under all rolling conditions and I certainly wasn't alarmed by it," he said. The roll was "uncomfortable" for the crew, but no one as hurt except for one member who bumped his head.

The man returned to work after being treated for the minor injury.

Captain MacGillivray said published reports of the incident were not accurate but could be misinterpreted. The ship did not almost tip over.

Warships are designed to be able to pitch with the waves, he said, and normally have water washing over their decks in rough seas. The hatches are all battened down in rough weather, so the ships do not take on water.

The 45-degree list was the biggest Captain MacGillivray could remember encountering in his career, but he said the ship could have taken anything up to a 90-degree list before it would be in danger.

The unusual list occurred while the Iroquois was returning from a trip to Boston designed to test its capabilities in rough weather.

Less Conventional Types Of Vegetables Pleasing

Are your favorite foods peas, beans, carrots, beets and lettuce? If so, by all means grow lots of them, but add some of the less conventional types, variations of the familiar green beans and hard round-headed lettuce.

Lilac-purple pods of the Blue Coco bean are not only beautiful when hanging on the vines but have a distinctive flavor when cooked though they are bright green by that time. The old Scarlet Runner bean may be new to you as a vegetable if you come from a cold climate. The scarlet flowers are ornamental, but the pods, if picked before the beans show through the pod are probably the best flavored bean ever grown. There is now a dwarf variety.

When selecting peas, look for a few of the edible pod type. You get more than double the nutrition from these as well as the most delicate pea flavor. The pods must be picked when two inches or so long, before the seeds swell.

Since peas are a cool weather crop, producing best in a cool, naturally moist soil, it is good to find a variety which bears well in hot weather. This is Wando, with a fine flavor, and needing only short twiggy supports of 18 inches or so to keep the loaded vines off the ground.

When choosing carrots, look for broad stumpy varieties unless you have an unusually deep loamy soil for long rooted types. Remember to sow thinly to decrease number of seedlings to be removed later. Carrot rust-fly can be avoided but is impossible to cure once it arrives on your crop.

Keep the tops of the carrot roots covered with soil; avoid touching the green tops; spread fresh grass cuttings around the plants frequently; strew coffee grounds along the rows.

All these are deterrents; their odor covers the odor of the carrot tops which is what attracts the flies to lay their eggs at the crowns of the carrots. These develop into grubs which burrow down into the roots.

There is little choice when it comes to beets, for the round varieties are now standard. Be wise in sowing a few and often, using the tops and the tiny roots cooked together from the time they reach three inches or so for their nutritional value is high.

When it comes to lettuce the choice is really wide. Choose anything with loose leafy green heads and you will have flavor, texture and higher vitamin value. The thinner the leaves the more tender they are.

The old Bibb type is ideal; or look for any of the so-called Butterhead kinds. Oakleaf lettuce with red edges is another favorite for flavor.

Only types have been mentioned here, for not every collection of seeds displayed in town contains all varieties. You will need to do the looking for varieties which seem to fit into the types described. By making notes of those which fill your needs you have a ready made list of varieties to order for next year's sowing.

SOLUTION FRIDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

A tendency that is most difficult for many bridge players to overcome is the instinctive urge to capture a king with an ace. As they would explain their action, were not aces born to capture kings?

While it is true that aces were born to capture kings, nevertheless situations arise — as in today's deal — in which a king must be permitted to reign for a moment in order to secure a happy future. Unfortunately, for his side, our South declarer didn't see it that way.

Both sides vulnerable. South deals.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♡	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣.

West's opening lead of the club king was captured by the board's ace, East following suit with the jack of clubs. This play by East denoted possession of the club ten, since in this type of situation, with adjacent honor cards, a third hand defender plays the higher of the two honors.

To trick two, the nine of trumps was led, and the finesse taken against East's hoped-for king. When West captured this lead with the king, he underled his queen of clubs to East's known ten-spot. Upon winning the trick, East laid down the nine of hearts (West's bid suit). West now took two heart tricks, thus handing declarer a one-trick set.

From the outset declarer's worry should have been that East would obtain the lead to play a heart through South's K-J. If this could be prevented, declarer would subsequently be able to discard the heart jack on dummy's fourth diamond. Declarer could have accomplished this objective in simple fashion by allowing West's king of clubs to capture the opening trick.

Whatever West now returned, he could not deprive South of the victory. Let's say another club was led, dummy's ace winning. The trump finesse would then be taken, losing to West's king. From here in, all the defenders could make would be West's ace of hearts.

But when declarer hurriedly grabbed the opening club lead with dummy's ace, he sealed his own doom, for he thereby created an entry of East's ten of clubs. Thus he preserved the West-to-East line of communication, enabling East to later lead a heart through South's K-J.

LATE DELIVERY

SHIRLAND, England (CP) — After waiting five months for her new carpet, Derbyshire housewife Tansy Patilla had unexpected guests early one morning — the carpet delivery men. They arrived at 1:30 a.m., installed the carpet, had a cup of tea and left. "I didn't really care," a bewildered Tansy said. "As far as I was concerned, it was a case of better late than never."

RCMP 'Imprisoned' With Convicts

EDMONTON — Two RCMP constables thanked their lucky stars that they were on good terms with their prisoners.

Trapped for 45 minutes in a stalled elevator in the law courts building, the two red-coated policemen were alone with 10 convicts.

"We had a short discussion on minority groups," Constable Terry Densmore, one of the trapped Mounties, said. Name of the other constable was not released.

"We tried to keep the talk light — away from the fact that we were policemen and they were prisoners," said Densmore.

The incident occurred shortly after the criminal appeals court adjourned for the day and prisoners were being returned to their cells in the basement.

"My only complaint was that they wouldn't tell us any jokes, dirty or otherwise," said the constable.

OTTAWA — New Democratic Party MP Barry Mather said Wednesday he opposes members of Parliament getting another $8,400 a year to run offices in their ridings.

Mather, in a prepared statement, said that the extra allowance for MPs — which will cost taxpayers another $2 million a year — will mean that citizens of every political stripe will be forced to pay for the sitting member in their constituency.

So far, the Surrey-White Rock MP is the first to come out in a public statement against the extra allowance for members as proposed by the minority Liberal government.

CORTINA, Italy — Elizabeth Taylor's latest acquisition — measles. The 40-year-old actress was placed in quarantine in her hotel in this winter resort along with her husband, Richard Burton, after a doctor reported she had contracted measles.

WASHINGTON — Senator George McGovern applauded "the bravery and tenacity" of those in the United States Congress, the courts and the press "who have given our system a few shining moments of vindication during the Watergate scandal." The Watergate affair, the South Dakota Democrat said Wednesday, "is not, as the president seemed to imply, typical of the political process."

"Our politics is better than that. And Watergate is worse than the tactics of any national campaign in my memory or modern times."

WASHINGTON — President Richard Nixon has nominatel former Georgia congressman Howard H. (Bo) Callaway to be secretary of the army. Callaway, 45, ran for governor in 1966 and got the most votes, but lost in the Georgia Legislature to Democrat Lester Maddox.

PARIS — The valet of the late fashion queen Gabrielle (Coco) Chanel, lost Wednesday his claim to a legacy from her of five million francs ($1.1 million). The valet, 40-year-old Jean Francois Mironnet, had backed his claim with a letter which said Chanel wanted to bequeath the money, her jewels and a house in Lausanne (Switzerland) to him.

ANNAPOLIS, Md — L. Patrick Gray, the former acting director of the FBI who resigned last week as the Watergate scandal exploded around him, is the only candidate for president of the U.S. Naval Academy Alumni Association, an academy spokesman said Wednesday. Gray graduated in 1950 and spent 20 years as a naval officer, retiring with the rank of captain.

SAN FRANCISCO — Pornographic film star Marilyn Chambers says her "All-American mother" soap box photograph soon will disappear from supermarket shelves.

The spicy starlet, who believes in "explicit sex scenes," said Procter and Gamble has informed her that a contract wouldn't be renewed for a picture showing her cuddling a laughing baby on boxes of Ivory Soap.

Miss Chambers, 21, who measures 35-24-35, is the star of the hardcore pornographic film Behind the Green Door, which just opened in New York after a 43-week run in San Francisco.

GLASGOW — A 25-year-old Scotswoman admitted Wednesday making 19 hoax calls about bomb scares in the hope that her boyfriend, a British soldier, would not be sent to Northern Ireland.

The defence in a court hearing for Kathleen McAuley, a Glasgow telephone operator, said she thought a series of bomb scares would horrify people and cause the troops to be brought home, court was told.

Miss McAuley was put on probation for two years.

TORONTO — Josyf Cardinal Slipyj, spiritual leader of the world's estimated eight million Ukrainian Rite Roman Catholics, will conduct services at Maple Leaf Gardens in Toronto Sunday. Held in a Soviet prison camp for 18 years, he was released in 1963 to the Vatican on condition that he not speak publicly of his prison experiences.

BARROW - IN - FURNESS, England Stan Heywood, 27, gulped down 40 pints of beer in 40 minutes to win a $25 bet at a local pub.

"I am still sober," he said. But then his troubles began.

His wife said "he's an idiot."

The bar charged him $15 for the beer.

And he learned that despite his tremendous capacity, the drinking bout failed to top the world's record. The honor is held by a British construction worker who downed 65 pints of beer in 59 minutes, 31 seconds in 1971.

TORONTO — A Canadian restaurateur says he's tired of reading that meat is overpriced. "It's not," Phil Tetrault, president of Phil's Restaurants, a Calgary-based chain of restaurants. "People will just have to get used to the high prices.

"A waiter in a good restaurant gets more in a tip that the farmer gets for producing all the beef on the table and that's not fair."

KITCHENER, ONT. — Assistant Crown attourney John Robb quickly dropped bookmaking charges which had been laid against Valerie MacDonald when he learned that the woman had been arrested just a few hours after she was assigned to her job in an off-track betting shop by Canada Manpower. The woman's lawyer, Bernie Walters, said Mrs. MacDonald was charged when police raided the shop.

SAN FRANCISCO — Nine years after Carol Doda introduced the topless with a bare-bosomed dance in North Beach, the California Supreme Court ruled she could be told to cover up.

Miss Doda, who now dances nude in the San Francisco night club distruct, promptly offered to perform before the judges to show them their decision was wrong.

The state court decided local communties could adopt ordinances prohibiting topless-bottomless in bars and restaurants. The decision came on the heels of a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that nude dancing could be barred in clubs where liquor is served.

QUEEN WON'T GO TO POT

LONDON (UPI) — The organizers said they would drop the naked sports, but not the marijuana, and invited the Queen to join them at the second annual pop and pot festival.

Organizer Bill Dwyer, 43, said Wednesday that an appearance by the Queen would bring "great rejoicing" to everyone present.

'Rave Review' for Victoria Play

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

What might be termed a "rave review" was given by adjudicator John Parker Wednesday to the Victoria Gallery Players' presentation of Joan Mason Hurley's original script, Paradise Retrieved.

The third evening of plays in the Vancouver Island Zone Drama Festival concluded with the sparkling little comedy.

Concerning the script, Parker said: "This certainly was inventive and it certainly was entertaining. The author has a very fine sense of dialogue and the structure is excellent."

He was not entirely satisfied with the ending "but I really liked the play, both on reading it and now seeing it."

He also mentioned that while the author had a hand in directing it, he was glad that it had also had a co-director (Michael Meiklejohn).

"All the things I have been talking about this week came right up in this play," he commented.

Parker considered it well cast by the Salt Spring Island Players and hoped the group would do the whole thing. (Voice from the audience: "We have.")

Speech patterns needed to be speeded up once control was established, Parker said, but on the whole he was pleased.

The set had looked nice and "very English" but positioning of furniture and lack of a real door were criticized. Poor grouping and inhibited movement resulted so that "I didn't get very many good pictures."

Concerning Campbell River Players' entry, The Rainy Afternoon by American playwright William Inge, Parker pointed out the author had noted the three actors were ages 10 in two cases and seven in the other.

Another group of three plays will be seen tonight at St. John's Hall. These will be Campbell River Players' in Thornton Wilder's Happy Journey from Camden to Trenton, Driftwood Players from Gibson's Landing with Bernard Shaw's Village Wooing, and Campbell River again in The Devil His Due by Seamus Fail.

HEALTH PERSONAL CHOICE

The executive director of Victoria General Hospital said today too many people expect someone else to pick up the pieces when their body deteriorates through misuse.

"We smoke, we over-indulge, we lack adequate mental and physical exercise," said Jim Fair. "Canadians appear bent on self-destruction primarily because few seem to recognize that there is a personal responsibility for maintaining good health."

Fair said Health Week, sponsored by the B.C. Hospitals' Association and being held May 6 to 12 this year, is an appropriate time for each person to recognize a personal responsibility for their health and start doing something about it.

Money Man Gloomy

VANCOUVER (CP) — An international money merchant said Wednesday that inflation will lead to a worldwide depression that will make the 1930s look like a summer holiday.

Nicholas Deak, president of Deak and Co., biggest foreign money exchange in North America, made the comment while opening a branch office in Vancouver.

"Inflation creates a boom that ends in disaster," he said. "The trend can't be reversed without a major depression.

"The current muddle will continue for years," he added. "There will be excitements and calms (and more excitements. There won't be any foreseeable solution of the problem of inflation."

Hungarian-born Deak said world inflation was exported by the United States, adding that the U.S. deprived the dollar of its integrity by allowing it to float.

"The collapse of the social structure in the United States, which will follow, will drag down the whole world," he said.

Brush Fires From Diesel?

A faulty exhaust system in a diesel engine may have caused the sparks which set off a series of small brush fires along CNR tracks between Cowichan Bay and Deerholm on Monday, a B.C. Forest Service official said today.

The engine has been taken out of service for inspection.

The fires broke out minutes after the train rolled by. They were quickly extinquished by loggers and railroad men.

Ministers Talk Strikes, Hours

OTTAWA (CP) — Labor ministers attending a two-day federal-provincial conference spent Wednesday discussing a compressed work-week, the right to strike and causes of illegal strikes.

Federal minister John Munro and seven of his provincial counterparts all took part in the first day of the closed talks. But when the meeting broke up they had few revelations to make.

The ministers did reach agreement on the need for a joint federal-provincial study into the causes of illegal work stoppages.

About 40 per cent of mandays lost because of work stoppages last year in the federal jurisdiction resulted from wildcat or illegal strikes.

Provincial ministers, however, were generally content to say the talks were "interesting," "worthwhile," "mostly informative" as Wednesday's session closed.

Quebec minister Jean Cournoyer, who has brought a set of discussion papers on minimum wages and jurisdictional problems to the conference for debate, said the ministers were being prudent and searching one another out. "Nothing precise was decided," he added.

Even though the Quebec papers were not due for presentation to the meeting until today, he made them available to the press at a news conference Wednesday.

In them, Quebec took a directly opposite position to that outlined by Munro earlier in the day on minimum wage advances.

Where Munro espoused solid advances as opposed to increases based on escalation formulas, the Quebec paper was against firm increases and wanted the use of escalator clauses endorsed.

The paper said gradual increases avoid panic and also make it easier for the provinces to pay for them.

Munro said he did not expect major stumbling blocks in the talks as the distinction between federal and provincial jurisdictions are generally clear.

JURISDICTION TOO

Among other problems Quebec wants to raise are questions concerning jurisdiction over workers employed on federal work sites and over inter-provincial truck drivers.

Munro said the federal government was interested in the experience of provincial governments which have allowed a modified work-week — which means the same working hours a week concentrated into three or four days.

Some firms under federal jurisdiction have asked for permission to alter their work hours to include a compressed week — a request which spurred concern among federal officials that perhaps the Canada Labor Code should be amended to allow such flexibility.

Employers now must pay overtime for any work over eight hours a day.

New Charge Laid

VANCOUVER (CP) — A second charge of possession of obscene comic books for the purpose of distribution has been laid following an April 26 raid on the Georgia Strait publication offices. This charge and a similar one stemming from a raid March 15, will be heard July 3.

Thirty Break-Ins Admitted

A 19-year-old Victoria man's confession after his appearance in provincial court on one charge Tuesday has solved 30 break-ins which netted several thousand dollars in the last three months.

Kenneth Graham Turner pleaded guilty to one of four break-ins at the Imperial Building Materials, 2955 Douglas, and was sentenced to one year definite and one year indeterminate by Judge William Ostler.

In court Turner admitted climbing a fence at the rear of the company property and entering the building by prying away a board over a window.

A police source said it was not until after he had been sentence that Turner admitted the other crimes. Police said he took $1,500 from the building materials company.

When Turner first appeared in court on the one charge Monday, prosecutor John Macintyre said Turner had a record dating back to 1965, when he appeared in a Calgary court and was placed on probation.

OPEN HOUSE SET

The Victoria mental health centre will hold open house Friday afternoon in observance of Mental Health Week.

"I am hoping that a good number of the general public will drop in to meet the staff, see the facilities and become better acquainted with the services we provide the community," said Dr. A. L. Aranas, the centre's director.

The centre, at 2328 Trent St., will hold the open house from 2 to 4 p.m.

Mental Health Week is designated annually by the Canadian Mental Health Association and observed across Canada.

Pollution Curbing Oyster Production

More than a quarter of British Columbia's oyster-producing areas are closed because of pollution.

These figures are contained in a brief from the environmental protection service of Environment Canada, to the provincial inquiry into municipal sewage and garbage disposal today.

Contaminated areas include Esquimalt Harbor from Saxe Point to Fisgard Island Light and from Fisgard Island Light to the southernmost point of Esquimalt Lagoon, including the lagoon; tidal foreshore on the east side of Saanich Peninsula north from Turgoose Point; and Cooper Cove in Sooke Harbor, the brief said.

The federal government agency said no "fail safe" methods exist to prevent any person from taking contaminated shellfish from public foreshores which may result in the transmitting of communicable diseases to other persons.

It said "stringent criteria" relating to sewage sources are necessary to protect the public and these should be:

1. Ideally, no discharge. Solutions approaching the ideal would be spray irrigation, sub-surface disposal of effluent and seasonal-holding lagoon systems;

2. Sewer outfalls should be designed to efficiently disperse wastes into receiving waters. The outfall must be located to avoid and least affect existing shellfish harvesting areas;

3. Where sewage treatment is essential, attention should be given to duplicate equipment, spill lagoons and a high level of operator training;

4. Treatment of storm water must be considered because of poor quality of the water;

5. Dumping of sewage sludge into marine waters "could have adverse effects" and this should be investigated before a choice is made between disposal of sludge on land or in water;

6. Sewage treatment plants and outfalls should be sited in accordance with plans developed co-operatively by all levels of government responsible for the administration of public health.

Sewage Spray Irrigation Urged

Spray irrigation with municipal sewage is advocated in a brief by the Okanagan Water Basin Board to the provincial inquiry into municipal sewage and garbage disposal.

But, the board added, while it favors this process "for most complete renovation of municipal sewage effluent," it recognized that in some locations geography may present "insurmountable physical restraints and costs" for spraying in which case tertiary treatment, particularly for removal of phosphorous, would be required.

The board said "it appears ironic that in a technically-advanced society, nutrient-bearing effluents are released to fresh water bodies where they are least wanted, creating costly environmental problems, while the same nutrients, required for agricultural production in the same area, must be purchased and added to irrigation water or soil.

"The solution appears obvious."

The brief said effluent discharges to "a relatively confined body of water" are not as easily assimilated as in large rivers or the ocean.

Secondary sewage treatment began in Kelowna in 1913, in Vernon in 1939 and in Penticton in 1948 and tertiary treatment now is being implemented, the brief said.

"Although the main mass of Okanagan Lake is still in relatively good biological condition, preliminary results of the Okanagan basin study indicate that nutrient unloading will have to be curtailed to maintain water quality near population centres and in the vicinity of sewage discharge.

"Within the next decade the total annual phosphorous loading to Okanagan Lake from all sources will be 174 tons. This must be reduced by 20 tons annually to maintain lake condition.

"The Okanagan system is virtually a large freshwater reservoir for major communities bordering the lakes. Unfortunately this same confined reservoir, of necessity, is also the receiving body for 1.9 billion gallons of treated municipal effluent from all communities in the region," the brief said.

Indications are that phosphorous and nitrogen are "the most critical elements promoting eutrophication" of the Okanagan main lakes.

Municipal sewage treatment for removal of 80 to 90 per cent of phosphorous alone could be sufficient to maintain water quality for the next 10 to 15 years.

"As population, industrial activity and agricultural activity increase, still further measures to curtail nutrient additions will be required," the brief said.

The water board called for "clear government policies and financial assistance" to make land suitable for spraying more accessible to communities and "land used for this purpose could double as an agricultural greenbelt."

The pollution inquiry, under the chairmanship of W. N. Venables, director of the Pollution Control Branch, continued today at Newcombe Auditorium.

The inquiry, including a seven-member panel of experts, is hearing and questioning 28 briefs from municipalities, organizations and individuals.

Cookie Boycott Urged

Greater Victoria residents were urged Wednesday night to boycott Dare Cookies.

The two million members of unions affiliated with the Canadian Labor Congress are being asked to stop buying products of Dare Foods Limited because of a one-year strike in Kitchener, CLC secretary-treasurer William Dodge wrote Victoria Labor Council.

Dodge said it has been a "bitter strike" marred by strikebreaking activity by the "notorious" Canadian Drive Pool company.

Labor council delegates agreed to urge all Victoria union members to support the national boycott of Dare Cookies.

A car that "...can suck the doors off anything not specifically built for setting drag strips on fire." MOTOR TREND, Nov. '72.
A car that has the amazing Mazda Rotary engine*.
That develops almost twice as much horsepower per pound as a comparable piston engine.
That has only three major moving parts.
That has a 24/24 engine warranty†.
Take a test in a Mazda Rotary and find out why ROAD TEST voted Mazda Rotary "1972 Import Car of the Year".
And, again, "1973 Import Car of the Year".

†Mazda warrants the basic rotary engine block and internal parts to be free of defects, with normal use and maintenance for two years or 24,000 miles, whichever occurs first. SHIP DENIES OIL DUMPING

A British freighter which left Victoria last Saturday was charged in provincial court today with discharging "oil or an oily mixture" off Vancouver a week ago.

Vancouver lawyer Peter Lowrey, acting for the 13,000-ton Baknes, pleaded not guilty. Trial date is July 6.

The charge was laid by the federal ministry of transport under the Canada Shipping Act and oil pollution prevention regulations. Maximum fine on conviction is $100,000.

An MoT spokesman said last week that a hovercraft followed the Baknes while she was en route from Vancouver to Victoria and took samples from the water between Lions Gate bridge and Point Grey.

Fascism Return To Italy Feared

ROME (Reuter) — Bombings, violence and strikes throughout Italy have produced fear and anger over the activities of neo-Fascist elements.

Although most commentators regard the prospect as remote, the question raised by repeated violence is whether Italy is approaching a path that may eventually lead to a return of Fascist rule less than 30 years after the death of dictator Benito Mussolini.

Bombs explode in Italian streets with alarming frequency, although for the most part they have caused little damage other than injuring the bombers.

Recently, violence has assumed more tragic overtones with three incidents stunning the country's conscience.

Two weeks ago, a young policeman was killed in Milan when a grenade was thrown during a neo-Fascist riot.

SEE INTERNAL ROW

Police at first assumed that the arson was a left-wing reprisal for the Milan affair. Subsequent investigations indicated it might have been the result of an internal rightist squabble.

Whatever the result of the inquiries now under way, the cumulative effect of the outrages has been to focus public attention on the growth of Fascism in Italy.

Thousands of Romans turned out for the funeral of the firebomb victims to hear neo-Fascist leader Giorgio Almirante declare: "We do not intend a vendetta of reprisals . . . but we do not intend forgiveness."

Almirante's neo-Fascist party MSI — Italian Social Movement — received nearly three million votes, or 8.7 per cent of ballots cast, in the 1972 general elections. It has 56 deputies in the lower house of parliament and 26 senators.

Card-carrying members of the MSI and other extremist right-wing groups come from every walk of life.

The MSI is a political force, though whether its votes alone, as the Communists claim, keep Premier Giulio Andreotti's frail centre coalition government from collapse is open to some doubt.

PARALYSIS FEARED

The government itself is threatened by paralysis. Against a background of economic recession and endemic social discontent, Andreotti had to face four confidence votes to keep his coalition alive before parliament rose for Easter.

A recent opinion poll suggested the government is losing popularity but public apathy is such that 52 per cent of the electorate does not seem to care whether the administration remains or resigns. In political circles the only question is whether it will collapse before or after the summer holidays.

Some observers suggest the situation is becoming ripe for a right-wing coup but the Italian right is itself fragmented. The MSI has spawned a constellation of tiny, extremist groupings such as the "Nazi-Maoist" Lotta di Popolo (People's Struggle) and the Mussolini Action squads.

Town Was Warned

Residents of Stewart in northern B.C. were warned that the highway linking the community with Terrace will be closed for some time due to flooding problems, Atlin MLA Frank Calder said today.

Calder was commenting on complaints from a Stewart Chamber of Commerce spokesman that appeals to the provincial government to take emergency action had gone unanswered.

The MLA said he sent last week to James McKelvie, chairman of the chamber's transportation and communications committee, a copy of a report from chief highways engineer J. A. Dennison indicating steps were taken to inform residents of the closure.

Dennison's report said the announcement was given to radio and television stations in Prince Rupert and Terrace, and in addition signs were erected on the Cassiar Highway outside Stewart.

"In his memorandum to Calder dated April 27, Dennison said road conditions were deteriorating and it would probably be "at least two to three weeks before there is a possibility of restoring access."

RENTAL GROUP REORGANIZED

The Greater Victoria Rental Aid Society has been re-organized as a committee under the Community Action Group.

Members of the society voted earlier this week to dissolve the organization which had been incorporated under the Societies Act in March.

Jim Nelson, who was acting president of the society and who founded the agency a year ago, has been named director of the committee.

The agency, which finds housing for low-income people, will continue to operate from its office in the First United Church.

Nelson said today the agency will re-assume its previous name, Victoria Rental Aid Service.

He said re-organization of the agency will involve the setting up of four committees each of which will deal with different aspects of the agency's work. These committees will deal with research, data collection, court assistance (to people who cannot get legal aid or afford a lawyer when appearing before the small debts court on landlord-tenant matters) and investigation.

The re-organization came after a month of dissention among members of the society which followed its formal incorporation.

UNESCO Rights Meeting

UNESCO's annual western conference on human rights will be held at Belmont Senior Secondary School May 10 and 11.

Attended by 150 high school delegates from B.C., the conference will discuss four subject areas; women's rights, the rights of the poor, the right to a healthy environment and the right to a relevant education.

There are 18 speakers including former Socred Welfare Minister Phil Gaglardi; new director of the B.C. Human Rights Act Kathleen Ruff; B.C. Liberal leader David Anderson; new B.C. Chief Commissioner of Education John Bremer; and Yvonne Cocke, wife of B.C. Health Minister, Dennis Cocke.

Each speaker will talk for five minutes and then join in panel debate and discussion.

UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization) sponsors the human rights conference, annually at one of the five B.C. schools belonging to their organization.

The two-day conference is open to the public.

Winnipeg Man Heads Ad Bureau

TORONTO (CP) — R. S. Malone of Winnipeg Free Press has been elected chairman of the newly-formed Advertising Bureau of Canadian Daily Newspapers (ABCDN), it was announced Wednesday.

A statement said the bureau is a new sales organization representing 63 daily newspapers across the country.

While its primary sales and research activities will be directed towards the national field, the new bureau will also serve on an industry-wide basis for the exchange of special market and readership studies, sales data and advertising practices.

"No other advertising medium can equal the depth of customer penetration for both products and services that is possible through daily newspapers," Malone told the first annual general meeting Tuesday.

PAY PACTS TO APRIL AVERAGE 7.5% GAIN

OTTAWA (CP) — Basic wage rate settlements reached in collective bargaining in the first quarter of 1973 will provide average annual increases of 7.5 per cent, the federal labor department reported Wednesday.

Settlements in the last quarter of 1972 averaged 6.6 per cent. Statistics are based on analysis of agreements covering 500 or more workers in industries excluding construction.

A total of 61 agreements were reached in the first three months of the year, with 21 being three-year settlements, 30 two-year agreements and 10 one-year contracts.

One-year contracts averaged pay increases of 7.0 per cent, two-year arrangements will pay 9.4 per cent in the first year and 6.4 per cent in the second and three-year settlements will provide raises of 10.5, 5.2 and 5.7 per cent for the first, second and third years respectively.

STILL NO BREAK IN WALLIS MURDER

The RCMP in Victoria said today there has been no breakthrough in the search for the murderer of local businessman Stan Wallis but there are still many leads being followed.

The body of Wallis, 42, of 511 Whiteside, was found last Sunday afternoon near his abandoned car on Stebbings Road, not far from Shawnigan Lake. He had been shot several times with a small calibre weapon and police have determined that he died Friday morning.

A tracking dog, used to search the area for clues Monday and Wednesday, was back at the same job today.

Police said earlier there had been a heavy public response to their call for any information on the case. Anyone who saw any traffic or individuals in the vicinity is asked to contact the nearest RCMP office.

KNIT & CHAT

By MAY E. MacLEAN

Today's pattern is a crochet handbag with a difference! An unusual effect is achieved with the aid of small bone rings over which the crochet is worked. As these are purely for decoration, they can be left off the handbag if you wish, but they are necessary for the shoulder strap.

This type of bag is a real swinger. Sling it over your shoulder and off you go! The soft satchel shape will hold lots of swag! Make several in soft pastel colors to match your summer dresses.

To order Leaflet No. 7351, send fifty cents in coin, plus a stamped self addressed return envelope, long one if possible. Send to: May E. MacLean, "KNIT and CHAT", c-o Victoria Times, 486 Montford Drive, Dollard des Ormeaux, Que.

Please be sure to state pattern number when ordering, and to enclose your stamped return envelope. Allow three weeks for delivery. My illustrated catalogue of other designs available is sixty cents from the same address.

Nixon Scandals No Match for Grant

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Richard Nixon's problems with the Watergate case are very serious but so far do not match the scale of scandal and immorality that surrounded President Ulysses S. Grant 100 years ago.

In the Civil War hero's eight-year presidency, corruption charges tarred both of Grant's vice-presidents, his personal White House secretary, his brother-in-law, a cabinet member and his wife, the U.S. ambassador to England, the Speaker of the House, a future president and government officials by the hundreds.

To top it off, Grant's Republican successor in the White House, Rutherford B. Hayes, won the presidency by a cynical political deal that took key electoral votes from his Democratic opponent, Samuel B. Tilden.

NAKED BRIBERY

Credit Mobilier, the Whiskey Ring and Belknap were the names of scandals that brought out evidence of the theft of millions of dollars and naked bribery in the "gilded age" of a century ago.

Grant was a military genius and was a fine judge of horses and cigars, but not of people, and he refused to believe corruption surrounded him. He turned coldly hostile to the few reformers who brought devastating evidence against the corrupters.

Chief among them was Orville E. Babcock, a Civil War colonel, an intimate of the Grant family, whose finger was found by historians on almost every thread of wrongdoing during Grant's two terms.

The first major public scandal was the Credit Mobilier affair.

Near the close of Grant's first term, the New York Sun published charges that Credit Mobilier, a construction firm set up to benefit builders of the Union Pacific, had authorized the secret sale of lucrative stock at cut-rate prices to members of congress who "would produce most good for us."

On the list of those alleged on the take from Rep. Oates Ames, a Massachusetts shovel manufacturer and a Credit Mobilier director, were outgoing vice-president Schuyler Colfax, his second-term successor Henry Wilson, speaker James G. Blaine, congressman James A. Garfield who later became a president, and George S. Boutwell, later made treasury secretary by Grant.

On Feb. 27, 1873, five days before Grant was inaugurated for a second term, Ames and a New York Republican congressman, James Brooks, were censured by the house, 182 to 36, for their complicity.

They escaped outright expulsion only because of parliamentary ploys by Blaine in the speaker's chair.

Even prior to this, Grant's brother-in-law, James F. Casey, had become nose-deep in corruption in the troop-enforced reconstruction era operations of Louisiana after the president had named him collector of customs — a post that had produced charges of misdeeds in New York and other cities.

A house committee reported that in the 1872 election the administration had illegally used $32,000 of secret service funds to hire detectives to find evidence of false Democratic registrations in Grant's re-election campaign which he sat out at his cottage at Long Beach, N.J., without making a speech.

WORTHLESS STOCK

In London, Robert C. Schwenk, a one-time fellow general of Grant's, was the U.S. ambassador to the Court of St. James. He taught his British hosts how to play draw poker. He also touted them on stock in the Emma gold mine which turned out worthless — but only after Schwenk had unloaded his shares at a good Yankee profit.

Yet these malfeasances paled to the innocence of a church bingo game when the story of the Whiskey Ring broke. At the centre of this multimillion-dollar scandal was the handsome, charming, unscrupulous Babcock, the president's personal secretary.

Basically the scheme involved false reporting of the number of barrels of whiskey produced by distillers and rectifiers in the midwest, with the ring pocketing what should have been paid in federal taxes.

The swindle netted $1,200,000 in St. Louis alone in 1874 and similar rake-offs were going on in Milwaukee, Peoria, Chicago, Indianapolis and other cities. Cigar boxes filled with $1,000 bills and letters containing $500 payments were delivered to Washington.

John McDonald, a former army general crony of Grant's, headed the ring in St. Louis as an internal revenue supervisor. Exposure came through the effort of Grant's second-term treasury secretary, Benjamin H. Bristow, a Kentuckian with political ambitions but old-fashioned ideas of honesty.

Bristow set up a secret investigation. On May 10, 1874, seizures at 32 whiskey plants in the midwest resulted in indictment of 360 distillers and government officials and the conviction of 110 of them.

Babcock first sought to use his army commission to undergo court martial by friendly fellow officers but finally he was indicted on civilian charges.

Grant remained unconvinced of his secretary's dishonesty and said he would go to St. Louis to testify personally as a character witness on Babcock's behalf. He was dissuaded from this but nevertheless went before the chief justice and swore out a deposition saying he never saw anything in his secretary's conduct that indicated involvement in the ring, and he would have known had Babcock been guilty.

Babcock was acquitted. The government prosecutor in St. Louis was dismissed at Grant's bidding.

Grant's secretary of war, W. W. Belknap, and his wife played for smaller stakes but the conduct was possibly more sordid.

When he first came to Washington, his wife found his $8,000-a-year salary too meagre to support her social climbing hopes and suggested to a New York contractor, Caleb P. Marsh, that he apply for the lucrative Indian trading post commission at Fort Sill.

When both Marsh and the incumbent, John S. Evans, sought the post, a deal was worked out. Evans would keep Fort Sill but would pay $12,000 a year to Marsh who in turn would give half to Mrs. Belknap.

Mrs. Belknap died shortly after receiving the first instalment but her husband collected $20,000 during his stay in office.

A senate investigating committee under the Democrats was on the verge of exposing the kickback racket but Belknap raced to the White House and submitted his resignation to Grant before the scandal broke.

At an impeachment trial in 1876, Belknap laid the blame on his dead wife and argued that since he had submitted his resignation, he was not subject to impeachment. He was acquitted by a senate vote.

Near the close of his presidency, Grant was buoyed by a string of Republican election victories at the state level and told his supporters: "I think we have assurance the Republicans will control the government for four more years."

Firm Pay Hikes Best—Munro

OTTAWA (CP) — Absolute increases in minimum wages are generally preferable to escalation formulas, federal Labor Minister John Munro said Wednesday.

He made the comments in an interview at the opening of a two-day federal-provincial labor conference as ministers from all provinces except Newfoundland arrived for talks. Gordon Dawe, the only minister absent, is dealing with a miners' strike at Buchans, Nfld.

Minimum wages are expected to be one of the subjects raised at the conference and Munro said escalators on wages also might be discussed.

He said an escalator in some provinces, where minimum wages are low, would have a minimal effect. Absolue increases would provide more, he added.

Minimum wages in the 11 jurisdictions now vary from $1.25 an hour for men and $1.10 an hour for women in Prince Edward Island to $2 an hour in British Columbia. The federal wage is $1.90 an hour.

Munro said it was not necessary to press for minimum wage parity at this time. As regional disparity decreased, then greater uniformity might be achieved, but he did not see equality in wages in the next five years.

"Anything after that is hypothetical."

The ministers are expected to discuss conflicts of laws and procedures between the federal and provincial jurisdictions. About 95 per cent of the labor force comes under provincial legislation.

"We hope to harmonize and minimize jurisdictional problems," Munro said.

$2.5M BOOST IN CITY BUDGET

A marathon session of council's committee of the whole earlier this week made some minor changes which reduced the mill rate estimate for general tax purposes from 47.1 mills to a straight 47, meaning a final increase of three mills over the 1972 rate.

The mill-rate increase will mean a jump of roughly $25 on most home owners' tax bills.

—Social welfare — $5,271,645 ($5,484,793).

—Public health — $515,654 ($476,645).

—Water distribution system — $1,113,285 ($1,037,475).

—Sanitation and waste removal — $1,385,060 ($1,096,610).

Main sources of revenue are as follows:

—General levy on property — $8,302,942 ($7,315,243).

—Provincial per capita grant — $1,976,352 ($1,836,910).

—Provincial assistance for health and welfare — $4,341,600 ($4,548,030).

—Provincial court fines — $410,000 ($340,000).

—Licences and permits — $436,950 ($417,700).

Beirut Battle Spreads, Gov't Sends Jets, Tanks

TAKE YOUR PICK of traffic instructions at Douglas and Bay Streets Wednesday and jolly good luck. Pedestrian signs, normally at right angles to each other, posed a puzzle after one of them was knocked out of line by passing vehicle. City traffic crew corrected situation.

BEIRUT — Army tanks and air force planes battled Palestinian Arab guerrillas in shell-torn Beirut today and indications mounted that fighting was spreading to other parts of the country.

Two helicopters hovered over the airport apparently directing the two Hawker Hunter jet fighter-bombers. The jets made more than a half-dozen passes in a 15-minute period.

The target of the strafing appeared to be the Bourj Barajneh refugee camp, jammed with thousands of Palestinian refugees, including women and children. Witnesses said the planes were firing rockets and machine guns.

Tank cannons pounded apartment buildings occupied by guerrillas, machine-gun fire sprayed city streets, guerrilla snipers staged hit-and-run attacks and bazooks were fired from speeding cars.

Explosions and shellfire mingled with the wail of ambulances as President Suleiman Franjieh vowed he would not tolerate a Palestinian "occupation army" in Lebanon. Attempts by leaders of both sides to enforce a ceasefire failed.

One group of guerrillas tried to blow up Beirut's main water reservoir at Dbaye, five miles north of the city, but were chased off by Lebanese armored reinforcements. Some of the guerrillas sought refuge in a nearby Palestinian refugee camp, others occupied a maronite monastery.

Tanks and armored cars circled the area, shelling the camp and the monastery with cannons and mortars. Troops occupied the monastery by mid-afternoon and pursued the guerrillas down the Mediterranean coast.

In southern Lebanon, near the Israeli border, troops opened up on a guerrilla vehicle that tried to run a checkpoint. Four guerrillas were killed, including a regional commander of the Syrian-backed Saika guerrilla group, and Capt. Riad Awad, a senior officer of Al Fathah whom guerrilla leader Yasiv Araft was said to regard as a "kid brother."

Attempts to enforce a shaky ceasefire, negotiated before dawn and announced again at noon, appeared unsuccessful.

A senior police officer, describing one incident, said guerrillas stopped an army truck carrying 10 soldiers, ordered them out at gunpoint and machine-gunned them in a nearby cellar. Three were killed and the other seven seriously wounded, the officer said.

Near the Camille Chamoun stadium tanks shelled a row of apartment houses 12 to 15 storeys high which the guerrillas still held despite heavy shelling Wednesday. The tanks' 105-millimetre cannon blasted huge holes in the walls.

A curfew imposed Wednesday night was lifted for two hours to permit citizens to shop for food and other necessities. It was reimposed at 11 a.m.

Other reports spoke of a "third force," sniping at both the Lebanese army and the guerrillas from rooftops.

In Wednesday's fighting, the defence ministry reported 12 soldiers were killed and 40 wounded.

The fighting broke out Wednesday in a dispute over the arrest two days earlier of eight bomb-carrying guerrillas. The Palestinians then seized two army corporals as hostages for the release of the guerrillas.

The hostages were set free late Wednesday, but the government still holds the guerrillas on charges of carrying prohibited weapons.

REFINERY GAS THEFT TRIAL SET

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — Sixteen persons, including a West Vancouver policeman, will appear in court here Friday to answer charges laid in connection with the theft of gasoline from Pacific Petroleum Ltd. refinery at Taylor, 11 miles south of here.

Prosecutor Brian Harrison said it was impossible to determine exact quantities involved. Initial reports put the amount at between three million and seven million gallons, worth at least $1 million.

He said the Crown will allege a conspiracy to steal petroleum by tampering with measuring apparatus at the refinery.

Insurance Hike

TORONTO (CP) — The cost of automobile insurance through private companies may increase an average of about 10 per cent this year, an industry official said today. D. B. Martin, chairman of the Insurance Bureau of Canada, said the increases will be based on rising repair costs and tax increases.

Fredericton Drier

FREDERICTON (CP) — Some local streets dried up Wednesday night as high water began receding for the first time since flooding hit during the weekend.

Trend Reversed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices of food and farm products declined in April for the first time in six months but the drop was more than offset by the biggest jump in industrial prices in 22 years, the United States government reported States government reported today.

Reds Hold North

Times News Services

SAIGON — North Vietnam was reported today to have taken control of hundreds of square miles of territory formerly regarded as a no-man's-land south of the demilitarized zone.

Military sources said North Vietnamese have consolidated control of an area which includes the Khe Sanh plateau and territory from the Laotian border north to the old demilitarized zone.

New roads have been constructed and the old French-built main roads, Route 9 and Route 14, have been resurfaced so traffic can use then in all weather.

Informed sources said it would be almost impossible for the South Vietnamese ever to regain control of the area without a large commitment of troops and protracted fighting.

Meanwhile, in Cambodia, United Press International reported that Communist forces firing a barage of toxic gas shells overran two battalions of Cambodian government troops 32 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, killing 20 and capturing 580 others.

The attack Monday near Neak Luong, an important ferry town on the MeKong River, was not reported by the Cambodian command but was confirmed today by both U.S. and Cambodian military sources with access to secret reports from the front, UPI stated.

Command spokesmen, however, have reported a number of toxic gas shellings against Cambodian forces in the area recently.

In Washington Wednesday, a House foreign affairs subcommittee approved a bill curbing the president's power to wage undeclared war. The bill is tougher than the one the traditionally less hawkish Senate voted last year and is considering again.

The main provision in each bill states that when a president commits U.S. forces abroad without Congressional approval, he must stop unless Congress gives its approval within a specified time.

Mayors Split on Method Of Funding Mass Transit

Greater Victoria mayors today were split in their views on a proposal to make automobile drivers pay for mass transit systems.

Greater Vancouver Regional Board has suggested financing rapid transit through a greater gasoline tax, an additional charge on motor vehicle licences and surcharges on downtown parking rates as well as residential electricity rates.

"It's certainly a more intelligent approach to the matter than the trend toward placing the burden on homeowners," Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen said.

The automobile, he said, is "the most highly subsidized thing in Canada" and drivers, rather than homeowners, should be made to pay for transit.

Pollen said a special transit committee of the Capital Regional Board met the provincial government recently and were told the government would pay capital costs and 50 per cent of the operating deficit of mass transit but the municipalities, through regional boards, would have to pay the other 50 per cent.

"I'm not sure this would be the fairest way or the best way of financing," said Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford.

"If we're forced to accept this 50 per cent we'll have to look at alternative ways of raising this and that (the Vancouver idea) is one of the ways," she said.

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young said the government could raise taxes against automobile drivers and remit them to the regional districts.

"I think this would be the route we should go," Young said. "Let the people who are helping to cause the problem pay for it."

"My initial reaction is that I feel I pay plenty now to operate my car," said Les Passmore, acting Saanich mayor.

"I certainly wouldn't want to use the bus," he said. "Like the average motorist if it's two blocks away I want to take my car."

GOP Aided McGovern —Probers

New York Tinies

WASHINGTON — Government investigators say they now have evidence that Republican sabotage and espionage efforts in the U.S. election campaign last year were far more widespread than was previously known and were designed to help Sen. George McGovern win the Democratic nomination for president.

Republicans viewed McGovern, the eventual nominee, as the weakest candidate Nixon could face, the investigators said, but added there was no way of determining how much over-all impact the major Republican intelligence effort, organized at a cost not yet fully estimated, had upon the 1972 primaries.

The investigators said that the espionage program, initially authorized by H. R. Haldeman, the White House chief of staff who resigned Monday, included at its peak three networks of agents controlled by the White House and the Committee for the re-election of the President.

The federal investigators said they had confirmed that at least some allegations about Republican disruption voiced by Democratic candidates were substantially correct.

These sources said there is now evidence that a Nixon supporter was infiltrated into the campaign offices of Sen. Edmund Muskie, D—Maine, in early 1972. Once there, he intercepted a variety of confidential documents that were subsequently leaked to the press.

(In addition, three newspapers report today that shortly before the 1960 Democratic national convention, burglary attempts were made on the Manhattan offices of two doctors treating John Kennedy.

(The Washington Post, New York Times and New York Daily News identify the physicians as Dr. Janet Travell, who later became President Kennedy's personal doctor at the White House, and Dr. Eugene J. Cohen.

(Cohen confirmed the break-in and said he felt there was no question that the intruders were after Kennedy's medical file. "The only lock broken was the one on the K file," he said.)

The basic Republican strategy was worked out in early

News Phones Bugged

By BOB WOODWARD and CARL BERNSTEIN
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Nixon administration tapped the telephones of at least two newspaper reporters in 1971 as part of the investigation reportedly ordered by President Nixon into the leak of the Pentagon Papers to the press, according to two highly placed sources in the executive branch.

The wiretapping was supervised by Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt Jr. and G. Gordon Liddy, who were then working in the White House, and it was authorized by John Mitchell while he was attorney-general, one of the sources said.

In this electronic surveillance, according to the same source, Hunt and Liddy supervised an independent team, or so-called "vigilante squad" of wiretapers not employed by the FBI — the agency that normally performs legal wiretapping.

That source named two reporters from the New York Times, which published the Pentagon Papers in June 1971, as being among those whose phones were tapped. Another source confirmed that the telephone of Times' reporters were tapped but could not identify those placed under surveillance.

It is unclear whether the wiretapping was legal. The attorney-general has power to

U.S. MAY SET FUEL USE PRIORITIES

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States faces the prospect of a serious gasoline shortage this summer and the government might have to set up priorities for allocating fuel, deputy treasury secretary William E. Simon told Congress Wednesday.

"In the short run, we think we may be in a situation in which we may need to take decisions on priorities," Simon said. "We cannot afford to let crops go unplanted or unharvested for lack of diesel fuels for our tractors.

"We cannot let our vital industries close down. We cannot endanger public health or safety."

Plenty of Gas at a Price—Industry

By ALAN FORREST
Times Staff

There will be no gasoline shortage in British Columbia over the next five years.

But prices are definitely leading upward.

Oil companies say that British Columbians are sitting pretty in terms of supply of petroleum products, thanks to the proximity of Alberta's massive fields.

But a spokesman for Imperial Oil in Vancouver said: "Frequent price increases for petroleum products can be expected."

Other sources indicated that Victoria's gasoline price, currently 54 cents a gallon (53.9) for regular could be expected to go to 55 cents within days. At the current rate of increase it will be 60 cents a gallon this time next year.

Premium gasoline, currently 59 cents (58.9) is likely to go to 60 cents now and 65 cents wthin a year at the present rate of increase.

But there will be plenty of gasoline at higher prices, oil firms say.

British Columbia firms refine 1.5 million gallons per day, only a small increase from the 1.2 million gallons per day ten years ago.

But the B.C. refineries serve a smaller geographic area than they did 10 years ago. The Okanagan and eastern B.C., once served by Vancouver-area refineries, are now largely handled by Alberta branches.

As long as refined gasoline continues to move into B.C. by tanker truck and train from Alberta, there will be no problem of supply — and oil companies see no economic reasons why the flow should not continue.

In addition there is a good supply of crude oil although wellhead prices are up.

British Columbia refines 128,000 barrels of crude oil per day 4.5 million gallons.

Of this total, 60 per cent comes in the Trans Mountain Pipe Line from Alberta fields, the remainder from B.C.'s Peace River country.

Again there are no economic reasons why this flow should be interrupted.

Oil companies are concerned about the long-term effect of political considerations, however.

In particular the B.C. Energy Act, which could be used to control gasoline prices, could produce a shortage, the companies warn.

Crude oil and gasoline are sold in an unregulated market, which tends to keep prices similar all across the continent.

It is cheaper to continue to serve traditional customers as long as the prices are comparable. However, if B.C. prices are artificially depressed below continental levels, crude oil and gasoline supplies could be diverted to more profitable areas.

The companies argue they need price increases to be able to afford to pay the increased costs of obtaining oil.

They claim they are engaged in a high profit but high risk business and they get nervous when they are restricted by rules that do not apply to their competitors elsewhere in the world.

In addition, they talk a different language from politicians and this makes cooperation difficult.

The industry does not recognize provincial or national boundaries but rather is concerned about costs of transportation and distances to market.

The terms "Canada's needs" or "British Columbia's requirements" are foreign to oil company executives who are busy using words like "cents per barrel" and "transportation costs."

If it were cheaper to buy

But Where Can They Get Some Help?

By WAYNE HARDING
Times Staff

When you dial the number listed in the telephone book for "Community Information Service," you hear a couple of rings and then the recorded voice of an operator who says, "The number you are calling is no longer in service."

For some people in Greater Victoria the message is symptomatic of the frustration they face when they seek information on medical, legal, financial and other urgent personal problems. (The Community Information Service folded last year.)

As the area has become larger, information on who can offer help has become harder to find — even though the number of agencies and their services has grown.

The people who suffer the most frustration in seeking help are the poor and the disaffected. Often they are those least able to understand or cope with the regulations of agencies.

"Most people aren't aware of the service available to them," Laurie Smith has found. He is a counsellor with Cool-Aid, the youth-oriented agency which offers a wide variety of services, including a hostel, to those who happen to find it.

And how do they find it?

There are referrals from other agencies, says Smith, "but kids sort of stumble through town. They hear about us most of the time from talk on the street."

Like others who work in the field, Smith feels there is a gap in community service in Victoria — at the point where a person first tries to find where to go and what to do to solve his problem, whether it's getting a cheap bed for the night or keeping one's son off heroin.

Once the right agency is found, "the bulk of people get good service," Smith says. But he adds it wasn't always that way and some claring flaws remain.

"City welfare has a long way to go," he claims.

"I've taken kids down there myself. It's pretty inhuman — just the manner . . . They don't take into consideration the space a person is in when he goes for welfare. It's pretty traumatic."

Mrs. Susan Talbot, president of the Community Action Group, sees a centralized information office as a natural function of the soon-to-be-created regional social service organization now under study by a committee appointed by Human Resources Minister Norman Levi.

"We think we've made a good case to the committee," she says.

She sees a centralized information service linked with the Community Action Group's "community advocate" program, a scheme in which volunteers go through the red-tape of agencies with the recipient of the service.

Ray Ferris, community services supervisor of the Family and Children's Service, agrees that a central office and single telephone number is not enough.

"You can set up an office with some file cabinets and maybe even a computer, but you really need a dynamic referral service with dynamic individuals who will go out on the side of the person seeking information or help."

Under the present scheme in which two dozen agencies work pretty much on their own, says Ferris, each agency "lives on its own reputation." People find services by word of mouth and "people will go where the action is."

"Our name is known and people know they can come to us," he says. At the same time, the Salvation Army makes many referrals to other agencies.

"Yeah, there are cracks (in the continuity of social services) including in the information area. But then, I guess, there always will be."

No More Highrises —Study

A 1973 James Bay Study which will be used as a guide in rezoning the area eliminates further highrise zoning and cuts down severely on frame apartment building zones.

The study by the city's planning and community development office goes beyond a draft study circulated in December.

It will go before council for discussion.

COUNCIL INFLUENCE

The study also reflects a stronger influence by city council, particularly that of Mayor Peter Pollen, who swore to curb the wild apartment-building boom that hit the area at the end of the 1960s.

The James Bay Study includes a map showing proposed zoning for the area which places a new "low density multiple dwelling" zone over most of the area west of Oswego Street.

The mid-section of the area remains devoted mostly to frame apartment buildings, with the notable exception of the Dallas Street waterfront from Dock to Menzies streets, which remains devoted to duplex or family housing.

The over-all effect of the proposed zoning is to freeze further highrise development except at the designated shopping centre at the intersection of Simcoe and Menzies.

The policy towards the area is essentially a conservationist one which foresees a growth pattern over the next 20 years related closely to that of the city as a whole. In the last few years James Bay's population has grown much faster than that of other areas. Ultimate population is put at 14,000, compared with the present estimated population of 8,500.

The planning department acknowledges that transportation will continue to be serious problem in the James Bay area, which is cut off from the rest of the city by the Legislative Buildings and Beacon Hill Park.

BOTTLENECK

The new study says detailed work will be carried out to examine the street system of bottleneck areas.

"Transit improvement potentials, staggered hours and parking place controls should be investigated as well as possible street improvements," the study says.

Policy for Ogden Point docks, which is served by mammoth trucks which drive directly through residential areas of James Bay, is firmly in favor of retaining the docks at its present size with increased emphasis upon servicing by water transportation as opposed to trucking.

'Non-Toxic' Materials Only Dumped in Sea: Manager

Mine manager Jack Clyne said that while there is a break, he denied any harmful material is being washed up on the beach.

The material we are discharging into the sea is non-toxic. "It is finely crushed rock."

He said the company is abiding by the pollution control branch regulations and not allowing heavy metals to run into the sea.

Clyne claimed that 99 per cent of the residents of Jordan River are satisfied the regulations and standards are adequate.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Margaret Whitney of Jordan River said the break in the pipe is dumping slurry close to shore and ruining beaches.

The company in August, 1971, was granted permission by PCB to dump tailings in the strait, subject to a number of conditions to control pollution of beach and sea life.

One of these was that it discharge tailing at a minimum depth of 40 feet, some 1,500 feet from the beach area. The company now wants this changed.

Executive director Dennis Young of the Capital Region Board, said today the board has protested to the Pollution Control Branch against the application to discharge coarse mine material 10 feet below the low water line and its fine material at a depth of 40 feet.

Young said region did not see why the discharge control should be relaxed when "there are indications that the company is not abiding by regulations and standards set up by the Pollution Control Branch."

Young said the board has also asked the PCB to conduct a thorough investigation before dealing with the company's application.

"We have also alerted the federal fisheries department and the B.C. fish and wildlife branch that there appears to be a pollution problem in area," he said.

THIRD-CLASS MAIL MOSTLY AFFECTED

Pickets around Vancouver's main post office continued to disrupt the flow of mail to and from Victoria today but a local spokesman said it is mostly third-class mail and parcel post which is affected.

A post office spokesman in Vancouver said discussions have been held with the federal justice department and an injunction may be sought against further picketing.

The pickets, members of the Teamsters' Union, are protesting award of a contract for delivering mail between Vancouver and Prince Rupert to a non-union company, Ponderosa Trucking of Mission, B.C.

The flow of mail between Vancouver and Victoria was affected Wednesday and again today but a load of first-class mail from Vancouver arrived in Victoria Wednesday night.

The local post office said today people should continue to use the mails for the present.

$51, $40 Tax Boosts For Saanich Residents

Average 1973 property tax increases in Saanich will be $40 and $51, depending on the school district the owner resides in.

Mill rates will be incorporated in a budget bylaw coming before a special meeting of council tonight.

Saanich is the only municipality in Greater Victoria incorporating two school districts, with the result that two sets of tax rates must be produced.

In the urban sector — the Saanich part of School District 61 — property owners will pay at a rate or 78.885 mills, up 4.63 mills from 1972, or an average $51 increase.

In rural School District 63 — roughly north of Royal Oak — the tax rate will be 79.535 mills, an increase of 3.61 mills, approximately equal to $40 on a typical property.

The rates include a general and debt tax at 45.48 mills, up 2.73 mills from 1972; a .3 mill increase to .68 mill for regional hospitals, and .015 mill, unchanged, for Municipal Finance Authority.

The school rate in District 61 is 32.71 mills, up 1.6 mills, and in District 63 is 33.36, up .58.

The tax rates do not cover sewer parcel or sewer maintenance charges which are dollar amounts levied separately.

These figures have been set but have not been presented to council. It is anticipated the previously-estimated $20 increase for sewer parcel charge will now be more like half that amount, and the user charge will show a marginal increase.

Last year the amounts were $44.30 net parcel tax and $20.15 user charge for average properties. Commercial rates would be proportionately higher.

Singers Injured

Minor injuries were suffered by 12 members of the Arion Male Voice choir when the bus they were passengers in collided with a lamp post in the Town and Country shopping centre.

John McVie, a member of the choir, said the group was returning from the B.C. Kiwanis Festival at the Queen Elizabeth Theatre in Vancouver and had stopped to drop off a few passengers when the mishap occurred.

Saanich police said the bus swerved to avoid hitting a car backing out of a parking space and hit the lamp standard. The driver was James Swain.

SAANICH PARKMEN, over the past dry weeks, have systematically been burying $10,000 in the ground at Lambrick Park. The money is represented by the elaborate base and drainage network for an eight-lawn bowling sheet at the Gordon Head park. Carpenter Ned Boatness drives in a stake holding forms for the concrete gutter which surrounds the rink. Still undecided is whether the municipality or a bowling club will operate the green. Ask the Times

Q. Can you tell me if there is any connection in the naming of Mary Tod Island and Nancy Hanks Street in Saanich with Abraham Lincoln? —R.J.

A. There is no connection with Lincoln in the naming Mary Tod Island. It was named by John Tod, a Hudson's Bay official, who served on the Legislative Council of Vancouver Island from 1851 to 1858, retiring as a gentleman farmer in Victoria. He named the island after his daughter in 1856. She later married John Bowker, after whom Bowker Street and Creek are named.

In the early 1900s Dr. Simon Fraser Tolmie and some others planned to build a race track in that area. It was never finished although part of it ran along where Kisber Avenue lies today. Tolmie had a race horse, bought in the United States, called Nancy Hanks. The road is named after his horse.

As Long as It's Par, Merchants Happy

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

The Canadian dollar has floated almost to par with U.S. currency — and Victoria merchants hope it stays that way during the tourist season.

The exchange rate, particularly when the Canadian dollar rises above the American, becomes a major problem in dealing with visitors.

For public relations reasons as well as for convenience, merchants prefer to deal with U.S. cash on an even basis.

Victoria banks report the Canadian dollar at 100.15 against the American or about one-eighth of one per cent.

For the difference in rate plus handling charges, banks are charging merchants 50 cents on each $100 of American money.

GOODWILL

Peter Tredgett, a director of the Victoria Visitors and Convention Bureau, said most merchants consider fractional losses as a write-off to goodwill.

When the rate goes to one per cent or higher, however, merchants charge the difference.

An effective rate of 0.6 per cent would be considered par, a rate of 1.2 per cent would be considered one per cent.

He said the volume of American money in July and August was too heavy to consider offering par when the effective bank rate goes above one per cent.

There have been some cases of American tourists getting par under such circumstances but this is more likely to be a merchant unaware of the changed dollar rate or an employee acting on his own.

Generally, almost all merchants follow the policy of collecting one per cent and above and paying one per cent and below.

HUGE FLOW

Victoria banks confirm that the flow of American money into the city is phenomenal during July and August.

Large bills and travellers' cheques are usually brought directly to the banks by tourists but most of the small bills — the bulk of the money — is brought in by Victoria merchants.

This creates a large surplus of American funds and banks find themselves shipping it to the United States every week to get Canadian cash.

This export of U.S. funds is the reverse of the situation in January.

In winter there is a shortage of U.S. money as Canadians are buying it up for trips to Hawaii or California and there are few Americans spending money in Victoria.

This creates a need to import some American cash.

About this time of year the banks reach a state of equilibrium, with supply and demand for U.S. cash evening out. It lasts from 30 to 60 days, however, and then the big surpluses begin to pile up.

Although the banks could not supply dollar totals, they report the stack of surplus U.S. funds in summer indicates that the city's tourist industry is thriving.

And store transactions will go more smoothly if the dollar continues at par.

Beirut Battle Spreads, Gov't Sends Jets, Tanks

BEIRUT — Army tanks and air force planes battled Palestinian Arab guerrillas in shell-torn Beirut today and indications mounted that fighting was spreading to other parts of the country.

Two helicopters hovered over the airport apparently directing the two Hawker Hunter jet fighter-bombers. The jets made more than a half-dozen passes in a 15-minute period.

The target of the strafing appeared to be the Bourj Barajneh refugee camp, jammed with thousands of Palestinian refugees, including women and children. Witnesses said the planes were firing rockets and machine guns.

Tank cannons pounded apartment buildings occupied by guerrillas, machine-gun fire sprayed city streets, guerrilla snipers staged hit-and-run attacks and bazookas were fired from speeding cars.

Explosions and shellfire mingled with the wail of ambulances as President Suleiman Franjieh vowed he would not tolerate a Palestinian "occupation army" in Lebanon. Attempts by leaders of both sides to enforce a ceasefire failed.

One group of guerrillas tried to blow up Beirut's main water reservoir at Dbaye, five miles north of the city, but were chased off by Lebanese armored reinforcements. Some of the guerrillas sought refuge in a nearby Palestinian refugee camp, others occupied a ruined monastry.

Tanks and armored cars circled the area, shelling the camp and the monastery with cannons and mortars. Troops occupied the monastery by mid-afternoon and pursued the guerrillas down the Mediterranean coast.

In southern Lebanon, near the Israeli border, troops opened up on a guerrilla vehicle that tried to run a checkpoint. Four guerrillas were killed, including a regional commander of the Syrian-backed Saika guerrilla group, and Capt. Riad Awad, a senior officer of Al Fathah whom guerrilla leader Yasiv Araft was said to regard as a "kid brother."

Attempts to enforce a shaky ceasefire, negotiated before dawn and announced again at noon, appeared unsuccessful.

A senior police officer, describing one incident, said guerrillas stopped an army truck carrying 10 soldiers, ordered them out at gunpoint and machine-gunned them in a nearby cellar. Three were killed and the other seven seriously wounded, the officer said.

Near the Camille Chamoun stadium tanks shelled a row of apartment houses 12 to 15 storeys high which the guerrillas still held despite heavy shelling Wednesday. The tanks' 105-millimetre cannon blasted huge holes in the walls.

A curfew imposed Wednesday night was lifted for two hours to permit citizens to shop for food and other necessities. It was reimposed at 11 a.m.

Other reports spoke of a "third force," sniping at both the Lebanese army and the guerrillas from rooftops.

In Wednesday's fighting, the defence ministry reported 12 soldiers were killed and 40 wounded.

The fighting broke out Wednesday in a dispute over the arrest two days earlier of eight bomb-carrying guerrillas. The Palestinians then seized two army corporals as hostages for the release of the guerrillas.

The hostages were set free late Wednesday, but the government still holds the guerrillas on charges of carrying prohibited weapons.

$2.5M BOOST IN CITY BUDGET

A marathon session of council's committee of the whole earlier this week made some minor changes which reduced the mill rate estimate for general tax purposes from 47.1 mills to a straight 47, meaning a final increase of three mills over the 1972 rate.

The mill-rate increase will mean a jump of roughly $25 on most home owners' tax bills.

—Social welfare — $5,271,645 ($5,484,793).

—Public health — $515,654 ($476,645).

—Water distribution system — $1,113,285 ($1,037,475).

—Sanitation and waste removal — $1,385,060 ($1,096,610).

—General levy on property — $8,302,942 ($7,315,243).

—Provincial per capita grant — $1,976,352 ($1,826,910).

—Provincial assistance for health and welfare — $4,341,600 ($4,548,030).

—Provincial court fines — $410,000 ($340,000).

—Licences and permits — $436,950 ($417,700).

REFINERY GAS THEFT TRIAL SET

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — Sixteen persons, including a West Vancouver policeman, will appear in court here Friday to answer charges laid in connection with the theft of gasoline from Pacific Petroleum Ltd. refinery at Taylor, 11 miles south of here.

Prosecutor Brian Harrison said it was impossible to determine exact quantities involved. Initial reports put the amount at between three million and seven million gallons, worth at least $1 million.

He said the Crown will allege a conspiracy to steal petroleum by tampering with measuring apparatus at the refinery.

Insurance Hike

TORONTO (CP) — The cost of automobile insurance through private companies may increase an average of about 10 per cent this year, an industry official said today. D. B. Martin, chairman of the Insurance Bureau of Canada, said the increases will be based on rising repair costs and tax increases.

QUEBEC BLAST KILLS FIVE

QUEBEC (CP) — An explosion in a former hospital on Chamin St. Foy in uppertown Quebec City Thursday caused "at least five deaths," Quebec City police said.

A police spokesman said his information was still vague, but there were at least five deaths, and 30 to 35 injured persons.

He said the explosion took place in the former Hopital de la Misericorde.

All available ambulances in Quebec City were sent to the explosion scene.

Reds Hold North

Times News Services

SAIGON — North Vietnam was reported today to have taken control of hundreds of square miles of territory formerly regarded as a no-man's-land south of the demilitarized zone.

Military sources said North Vietnamese have consolidated control of an area which includes the Khe Sanh plateau and territory from the Laotian border north to the old demilitarized zone.

New roads have been constructed and the old French-built main roads, Route 9 and Route 14, have been resurfaced so traffic can use them in all weather.

Informed sources said it would be almost impossible for the South Vietnamese ever to regain control of the area without a large commitment of troops and protracted fighting.

Meanwhile, in Cambodia, United Press International reported that Communist forces firing a barage of toxic gas shells overran two battalions of Cambodian government troops 32 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, killing 20 and capturing 580 others.

The attack Monday near Neak Luong, an important ferry town on the MeKong River, was not reported by the Cambodian command but was confirmed today by both U.S. and Cambodian military sources with access to secret reports from the front, UPI stated.

Command spokesmen, however, have reported a number of toxic gas shellings against Cambodian forces in the area recently.

In Washington Wednesday, a House foreign affairs subcommittee approved a bill curbing the president's power to wage undeclared war. The bill is tougher than the one the traditionally less hawkish Senate voted last year and is considering again.

The main provision in each bill states that when a president commits U.S. forces abroad without Congressional approval, he must stop unless Congress gives its approval within a specified time.

Mayors Split on Method Of Funding Mass Transit

Greater Victoria mayors today were split in their views on a proposal to make automobile drivers pay for mass transit systems.

Greater Vancouver Regional Board has suggested financing rapid transit through a greater gasoline tax, an additional charge on motor vehicle licences and surcharges on downtown parking rates as well as residential electricity rates.

"It's certainly a more intelligent approach to the matter than the trend toward placing the burden on homeowners," Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen said.

The automobile, he said, is "the most highly subsidized thing in Canada" and drivers, rather than homeowners, should be made to pay for transit.

Pollen said a special transit committee of the Capital Regional Board met the provincial government recently and were told the government would pay capital costs and 50 per cent of the operating defecit of mass transit but the municipalities, through regional boards, would have to pay the other 50 per cent.

"I'm not sure this would be the fairest way or the best way of financing," said Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford.

"If we're forced to accept this 50 per cent we'll have to look at alternative ways of raising this and that (the Vancouver idea) is one of the ways," she said.

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young said the government could raise taxes against automobile drivers and remit them to the regional districts.

"I think this would be the route we should go," Young said. "Let the people who are helping to cause the problem pay for it."

"My initial reaction is that I feel I pay plenty now to operate my car," said Les Passmore, acting Saanich mayor.

"I certainly wouldn't want to use the bus," he said. "Like the average motorist, if it's two blocks away I want to take my car."

GOP Aided McGovern —Probers

New York Times

WASHINGTON — Government investigators say they now have evidence that Republican sabotage and espionage efforts in the U.S. election campaign last year were far more widespread than was previously known and were designed to help Sen. George McGovern win the Democratic nomination for president.

Republicans viewed McGovern, the eventual nominee, as the weakest candidate Nixon could face, the investigators said, but added there was no way of determining how much over-all impact the major Republican intelligence effort, organized at a cost not yet fully estimated, had upon the 1972 primaries.

The investigators said that the espionage program, initially authorized by H. R. Haldeman, the White House chief of staff who resigned Monday, included at its peak three networks of agents controlled by the White House and the Committee for the re-election of the President.

The federal investigators said they had confirmed that at least some allegations about Republican disruption voiced by Democratic candidates were substantially correct.

These sources said there is now evidence that a Nixon supporter was infiltrated into the campaign offices of Sen. Edmund Muskie, D—Maine, in early 1972. Once there, he intercepted a variety of confidential documents that were subsequently leaked to the press.

(In addition, three newspapers report today that shortly before the 1960 Democratic national convention, burglary attempts were made on the Manhattan offices of two doctors treating John Kennedy.

(The Washington Post, New York Times and New York Daily News identify the physicians as Dr. Janet Travell, who later became President Kennedy's personal doctor at the White House, and Dr. Eugene J. Cohen.

(Cohen confirmed the break-in and said he felt there was no question that the intruders were after Kennedy's medical file. "The only lock broken was the one on the K file," he said.)

The basic Republican strategy was worked out in early

WASHINGTON — The Nixon administration tapped the telephones of at least two newspaper reporters in 1971 as part of the investigation reportedly ordered by President Nixon into the leak of the Pentagon Papers to the press, according to two highly placed sources in the executive branch.

The wiretapping was supervised by Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt Jr. and G. Gordon Liddy, who were then working in the White House, and it was authorized by John Mitchell while he was attorney-general, one of the sources said.

In this electronic surveillance, according to the same source, Hunt and Liddy supervised an independent team, or so-called "vigilante squad" of wiretappers not employed by the FBI — the agency that normally performs legal wiretapping.

That source named two reporters from the New York Times, which published the Pentagon Papers in June 1971, as being among those whose phones were tapped. Another source confirmed that the telephone of Times' reporters were tapped but could not identify those placed under surveillance.

It is unclear whether the wiretapping was legal. The attorney-general has power to

U.S. MAY SET FUEL USE PRIORITIES

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States faces the prospect of a serious gasoline shortage this summer and the government might have to set up priorities for allocating fuel, deputy treasury secretary William E. Simon told Congress Wednesday.

"In the short run, we think we may be in a situation in which we may need to take decisions on priorities," Simon said. "We cannot afford to let crops go unplanted or unharvested for lack of diesel fuels for our tractors.

"We cannot let our vital industries close down. We cannot endanger public health or safety."

Plenty of Gas at a Price—Industry

By ALAN FORREST
Times Staff

There will be no gasoline shortage in British Columbia over the next five years.

But prices are definitely leading upward.

Oil companies say that British Columbians are sitting pretty in terms of supply of petroleum products, thanks to the proximity of Alberta's massive fields.

But a spokesman for Imperial Oil in Vancouver said: "Frequent price increases for petroleum products can be expected."

Other sources indicated that Victoria's gasoline price, currently 54 cents a gallon (53.9) for regular could be expected to go to 55 cents within days. At the current rate of increase it will be 60 cents a gallon this time next year.

Premium gasoline, currently 59 cents (58.9) is likely to go to 60 cents now and 65 cents within a year at the present rate of increase.

But there will be plenty of gasoline at higher prices, oil firms say.

British Columbia firms refine 1.5 million gallons per day, only a small increase from the 1.2 million gallons per day 10 years ago.

But the B.C. refineries serve a smaller geographic area than they did 10 years ago. The Okanagan and eastern B.C., once served by Vancouver-area refineries, are now largely handled by Alberta branches.

As long as refined gasoline continues to move into B.C. by tanker truck and train from Alberta, there will be no problem of supply — and oil companies see no economic reasons why the flow should not continue.

In addition there is a good supply of crude oil although wellhead prices are up.

British Columbia refines 128,000 barrels of crude oil per day — 4.5 million gallons.

Of this total, 60 per cent comes in the Trans Mountain Pipe Line from Alberta fields, the remainder from B.C.'s Peace River country.

Again there are no economic reasons why this flow should be interrupted.

Oil companies are concerned about the long-term effect of political considerations, however.

In particular the B.C. Energy Act, which could be used to control gasoline prices, could produce a shortage, the companies warn.

Crude oil and gasoline are sold in an unregulated market, which tends to keep prices similar all across the continent.

It is cheaper to continue to serve traditional customers as long as the prices are comparable. However, if B.C. prices are artificially depressed below continental levels, crude oil and gasoline supplies could be diverted to more profitable areas.

The companies argue they need price increases to be able to afford to pay the increased costs of obtaining oil.

They claim they are engaged in a high profit but high risk business and they get nervous when they are restricted by rules that do not apply to their competitors elsewhere in the world.

In addition, they talk a different language from politicians and this makes cooperation difficult.

The industry does not recognize provincial or national boundaries but rather is concerned about costs of transportation and distances to market.

The terms "Canada's needs" or "British Columbia's requirements" are foreign to oil company executives who are busy using words like "cents per barrel" and "transportation costs."

If it were cheaper to buy

SECRETARY'S PAY TOPS CHIEF'S

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Vancouver and District Labor Council Tuesday gave its secretary-treasurer a raise to $15,600 a year plus $1,200 annual car allowance — a lot more than its president gets.

Syd Thompson, who receives no pay as council president and draws about $13,000 a year as head of the 8,000-member Vancouver local of the International Woodworkers of America, said he doesn't oppose the raise for council secretary Jack Lawrence.

"But next year and the year after things will be different," he said. "In my opinion this raise is going to the borderline.

"There's something wrong when union officers are getting paid like the (company) bosses; they'll start living like the bosses.

"We have to keep officers' wages in line with those of the people they represent."

Jack Phillips, chairman of the council that negotiated Lawrence's salary, said the amount represented less than a five per cent increase taking into account changes in fringe benefits.

Murder Trial Ordered

A trial was ordered Wednesday for Jo Ann Brenda Anderson in connection with the death, March 9, of her mother.

She was committed for trial in a higher court early next month before judge and jury, after a preliminary hearing in provincial court.

The mother, Mrs. Shirley Anderson, was stabbed in her home. The daughter was charged with non-capital murder.

The court continued bail of $7,500.

Press Council Urged by Labor Body

A community press council should be established, Victoria Labor Council agreed Wednesday night.

Council delegates approved an executive recommendation favoring a press council and will inform Victoria Times publisher Stuart Underhill and The Daily Colonist publisher R. J. Bower.

In addition, the labor council will seek the support of other organizations for the proposed community press council.

Council secretary Larry Ryan said the proposal "has a little to do with the Collins case," referring to the resignation two weeks ago of Colonist columnist Don Collins after he was informed his column would no longer be published.

"Collins obviously was not free to write what he wants. It's an obvious question to be considered by the press council," Ryan said.

The council had written Bower asking why Collins' column was dropped, but received a letter dated April 23 saying Bower was out of town and that the council's letter would be drawn to his attention on his return.

Both Underhill and Bower were out of town today.

Ryan said a press council is "working very well" in England and the Senate committee inquiring into the mass media in Canada had recommended establishment of press councils.

"The council would help to make better newspapers, he said, and act as an ombudsman between the public and the newspapers.

"It's awfully difficult to communicate with the publishers," Ryan said, but the newspapers arrive twice daily "on the porch."

He said the council could discuss standards of journalism and noted that both Victoria newspapers are owned by the same company, Victoria Press Limited, which in turn is owned by FP Publications Limited of Winnipeg.

Ryan said press exclusion at some city hall meetings "should be the first item on the agenda" of a press council, which would need cooperation from the publishers in being established.

"We are not in any way suggesting we infringe on the jurisdiction of the Newspaper Guild within Victoria Press," he said, referring to the union which represents newsroom and other non-mechanical employees.

The labor council's decision was opposed by Neil Hindle of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Local 191. He suggested the recommendation be referred back for review by affiliated unions.

"In a free society, the free press itself is its own best guardian," he said.

"Many people may mislead people or tell lies but the press, like the church, is beyond suspicion."

He warned that if a press council is established, "it can be controlled or manipulated. We should be very careful, very cautious."

Flush Toilets Demanded By Construction Workers

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia construction unions have launched a campaign to improve sanitary conditions on construction sites.

Specifically they want flush toilets at such sites.

Tony Ceraldi, chairman of the occupational health and safety committee of the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council, said portable outhouses now used across the province are "very nauseating on occasion."

The committee has presented a brief to Health Minister Denis Cocke asking for sanitary urinals, toilets and washroom facilities.

The unions also want legislation requiring an occupational health nurses to be on duty at all construction sites.

In Toronto last week the plumbers' union presented Ontario contractors with a demand in new negotiations for flush toilets and a spokesman described it as a "strike issue."

Ceraldi said B.C.'s 60,000 construction workers affiliated with the council are a long way from striking over outhouses but added they are far from satisfied with the present situation.

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greater Vancouver Regional Hospital District Wednesdat approved $12,000 for working plans for new nuclear medicine facilities at Vancouver General Hospital. The federal government has ordered the hospital to renovate its nuclear medical facility or lose its licence to operate.

Order Departs

KAMLOOPS (CP) — The Roman Catholic Oblate Order said Wednesday it plans to leave the Kamloops Indian Reserve after 84 years, turning over administratio, of the reserve's school to an Indian.

Rev. Allan Noonan, who has directed the school for the past nine years, said the change-over is just the latest in a series of similar moves in British Columbia.

Vote Ruling Friday

KAMLOOPS (CP) — The decision on the validity of the election of a chief of the Kamloops Indian band will be announced Friday, Kamloops MP Len Marchand said Wednesday.

Marchand, parliamentary secretary to Indian Affairs Minister Jean Chretien, said in a telephone interview from Ottawa that he will announce the findings of a federal inquiry into the disputed Dec. 21 election of Norman Larue as chief at a press conference here Friday.

Sewage Study Set

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greater Vancouver Regional District Wednesday approved a six-month study — to cost less than $25,000 — of dechlorinating sewage processed at the Lulu Island treatment plant. Sewage is chlorinated to reduce bacteria, but there has been concern expressed about the process causing possible toxicity to fish after treated effluent goes into the Fraser River.

Posed as Intern

$2.5M BOOST IN CITY BUDGET

The city of Victoria approved today a $29,265,613 operating budget — just over $2.5 million above last year's estimate.

A marathon session of council's committee of the whole earlier this week made some minor changes which reduced the mill rate estimate for general tax purposes from 47.1 mills to a straight 47, meaning a final increase of three mills over the 1972 rate.

The mill-rate increase will mean a jump of roughly $25 on most home owners' tax bills.

—Social welfare — $5,271,645 ($5,484,793).

—Public health — $515,654 ($476,645).

—Water distribution system — $1,113,285 ($1,037,475).

—Sanitation and waste removal — $1,385,060 ($1,096,610).

—General levy on property — $8,302,942 ($7,315,243).

—Provincial per capita grant — $1,976,352 ($1,826,910).

—Provincial assistance for health and welfare — $4,341,600 ($4,548,030).

—Provincial court fines — $410,000 ($340,000).

—Licences and permits — $436,950 ($417,700).

NEWS BRIEFS

Rolls Goes Public

LONDON (Reuter) — Rolls-Royce, maker of the world's most exclusive cars, has decided to give the public a chance to buy shares in the company. N. M. Rothschild, the merchant bankers, announced today that Rolls-Royce Motors Ltd., which makes the cars favored by millionaires and heads of state, has rejected private bids to buy the company.

Insurance Hike

TORONTO (CP) — The cost of automobile insurance through private companies may increase an average of about 10 per cent this year, an industry official said today. D. B. Martin, chairman of the Insurance Bureau of Canada, said the increases will be based on rising repair costs and tax increases.

QUEBEC BLAST KILLS FIVE

QUEBEC (CP) — An explosion in a former hospital on Chamin St. Foy in uppertown Quebec City Thursday caused "at least five deaths," Quebec City police said.

A police spokesman said his information was still vague, but there were at least five deaths, and 30 to 35 injured persons.

He said the explosion took place in the former Hopital de la Misericorde.

Reds Hold North

SAIGON — North Vietnam was reported today to have taken control of hundreds of square miles of territory formerly regarded as a no-man's-land south of the demilitarized zone.

Military sources said North Vietnamese have consolidated control of an area which includes the Khe Sanh plateau and territory from the Laotian border north to the old demilitarized zone.

New roads have been constructed and the old French-built main roads, Route 9 and Route 14, have been resurfaced so traffic can use them in all weather.

Informed sources said it would be almost impossible for the South Vietnamese ever to regain control of the area without a large commitment of troops and protracted fighting.

Meanwhile, in Cambodia, United Press International reported that Communist forces firing a barage of toxic gas shells overran two battalions of Cambodian government troops 32 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, killing 20 and capturing 580 others.

The attack Monday near Neak Luong, an important ferry town on the MeKong River, was not reported by the Cambodian command but was confirmed today by both U.S. and Cambodian military sources with access to secret reports from the front, UPI stated.

Command spokesmen, however, have reported a number of toxic gas shellings against Cambodian forces in the area recently.

In Washington Wednesday, a House foreign affairs subcommittee approved a bill curbing the president's power to wage undeclared war. The bill is tougher than the one the traditionally less hawkish Senate voted last year and is considering again.

The main provision in each bill states that when a president commits U.S. forces abroad without Congressional approval, he must stop unless Congress gives its approval within a specified time.

BEIRUT — Army tanks and air force planes battled Palestinian Arab guerrillas in shell-torn Beirut today and indications mounted that fighting was spreading to other parts of the country.

Two helicopters hovered over the airport apparently directing the two Hawker Hunter jet fighter-bombers. The jets made more than a half-dozen passes in a 15-minute period.

The target of the strafing appeared to be the Bourj Barajneh refugee camp, jammed with thousands of Palestinian refugees, including women and children. Witnesses said the planes were firing rockets and machine guns.

Tank cannons pounded apartment buildings occupied by guerrillas, machine-gun fire sprayed city streets, guerrilla snipers staged hit-and-run attacks and bazookas were fired from speeding cars.

Explosions and shellfire mingled with the wail of ambulances as President Suleiman Franjieh vowed he would not tolerate a Palestinian "occupation army" in Lebanon. Attempts by leaders of both sides to enforce a ceasefire failed.

One group of guerrillas tried to blow up Beirut's main water reservoir at Dbaye, five miles north of the city, but were chased off by Lebanese armored reinforcements. Some of the guerrillas sought refuge in a nearby Palestinian refugee camp, others occupied a ruined monastry.

Tanks and armored cars circled the area, shelling the camp and the monastery with cannons and mortars. Troops occupied the monastery by mid-afternoon and pursued the guerrillas down the Mediterranean coast.

In southern Lebanon, near the Israeli border, troops opened up on a guerrilla vehicle that tried to run a checkpoint. Four guerrillas were killed, including a regional commander of the Syrian-backed Saika guerrilla group, and Capt. Riad Awad, a senior officer of Al Fathah whom guerrilla leader Yasiv Araft was said to regard as a "kid brother."

Attempts to enforce a shaky ceasefire, negotiated before dawn and announced again at noon, appeared unsuccessful.

A senior police officer, describing one incident, said guerrillas stopped an army truck carrying 10 soldiers, ordered them out at gunpoint and machine-gunned them in a nearby cellar. Three were killed and the other seven seriously wounded, the officer said.

In Wednesday's fighting, the defence ministry reported 12 soldiers were killed and 40 wounded.

The fighting broke out Wednesday in a dispute over the arrest two days earlier of eight bomb-carrying guerrillas. The Palestinians then seized two army corporals as hostages for the release of the guerrillas.

The hostages were set free late Wednesday, but the government still holds the guerrillas on charges of carrying prohibited weapons.

REFINERY GAS THEFT TRIAL SET

FORT ST. JOHN (CP) — Sixteen persons, including a West Vancouver policeman, will appear in court here Friday to answer charges laid in connection with the theft of gasoline from Pacific Petroleum Ltd. refinery at Taylor, 11 miles south of here.

Prosecutor Brian Harrison said it was impossible to determine exact quantities involved. Initial reports put the amount at between three million and seven million gallons, worth at least $1 million.

He said the Crown will allege a conspiracy to steal petroleum by tampering with measuring apparatus at the refinery.

GOP Aided McGovern —Probers

New York Times

WASHINGTON — Government investigators say they now have evidence that Republican sabotage and espionage efforts in the U.S. election campaign last year were far more widespread than was previously known and were designed to help Sen. George McGovern win the Democratic nomination for president.

Republicans viewed McGovern, the eventual nominee, as the weakest candidate Nixon could face, the investigators said, but added there was no way of determining how much over-all impact the major Republican intelligence effort, organized at a cost not yet fully estimated, had upon the 1972 primaries.

The investigators said that the espionage program, initially authorized by H. R. Haldeman, the White House chief of staff who resigned Monday, included at its peak three networks of agents controlled by the White House and the Committee for the re-election of the President.

The federal investigators said they had confirmed that at least some allegations about Republican disruption voiced by Democratic candidates were substantially correct.

These sources said there is now evidence that a Nixon supporter was infiltrated into the campaign offices of Sen. Edmund Muskie, D—Maine, in early 1972. Once there, he intercepted a variety of confidential documents that were subsequently leaked to the press.

(In addition, three newspapers report today that shortly before the 1960 Democratic national convention, burglary attempts were made on the Manhattan offices of two doctors treating John Kennedy.

(The Washington Post, New York Times and New York Daily News identify the physicians as Dr. Janet Travell, who later became President Kennedy's personal doctor at the White House, and Dr. Eugene J. Cohen.

(Cohen confirmed the break-in and said he felt there was no question that the intruders were after Kennedy's medical file. "The only lock broken was the one on the K file," he said.)

The basic Republican strategy was worked out in early

Mayors Split on Method Of Funding Mass Transit

Greater Victoria mayors today were split in their views on a proposal to make automobile drivers pay for mass transit systems.

Greater Vancouver Regional Board has suggested financing rapid transit through a greater gasoline tax, an additional charge on motor vehicle licences and surcharges on downtown parking rates as well as residential electricity rates.

"It's certainly a more intelligent approach to the matter than the trend toward placing the burden on homeowners," Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen said.

The automobile, he said, is "the most highly subsidized thing in Canada" and drivers, rather than homeowners, should be made to pay for transit.

Pollen said a special transit committee of the Capital Regional Board met the provincial government recently and were told the government would pay capital costs and 50 per cent of the operating defecit of mass transit but the municipalities, through regional boards, would have to pay the other 50 per cent.

"I'm not sure this would be the fairest way or the best way of financing," said Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford.

"If we're forced to accept this 50 per cent we'll have to look at alternative ways of raising this and that (the Vancouver idea) is one of the ways," she said.

Esquimalt Mayor Art Young said the government could raise taxes against automobile drivers and remit them to the regional districts.

"I think this would be the route we should go," Young said. "Let the people who are helping to cause the problem pay for it."

"My initial reaction is that I feel I pay plenty now to operate my car," said Les Passmore, acting Saanich mayor.

"I certainly wouldn't want to use the bus," he said. "Like the average motorist, if it's two blocks away I want to take my car."

News Phones Bugged

By BOB WOODWARD and CARL BERNSTEIN

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Nixon administration tapped the telephones of at least two newspaper reporters in 1971 as part of the investigation reportedly ordered by President Nixon into the leak of the Pentagon Papers to the press, according to two highly placed sources in the executive branch.

The wiretapping was supervised by Watergate conspirators E. Howard Hunt Jr. and G. Gordon Liddy, who were then working in the White House, and it was authorized by John Mitchell while he was attorney-general, one of the sources said.

In this electronic surveillance, according to the same source, Hunt and Liddy supervised an independent team, or so-called "vigilante squad" of wiretappers not employed by the FBI — the agency that normally performs legal wiretapping.

That source named two reporters from the New York Times, which published the Pentagon Papers in June 1971, as being among those whose phones were tapped. Another source confirmed that the telephone of Times' reporters were tapped but could not identify those placed under surveillance.

It is unclear whether the wiretapping was legal. The attorney-general has power to

U.S. MAY SET FUEL USE PRIORITIES

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States faces the prospect of a serious gasoline shortage this summer and the government might have to set up priorities for allocating fuel, deputy treasury secretary William E. Simon told Congress Wednesday.

"In the short run, we think we may be in a situation in which we may need to take decisions on priorities," Simon said. "We cannot afford to let crops go unplanted or unharvested for lack of diesel fuels for our tractors.

"We cannot let our vital industries close down. We cannot endanger public health or safety."

Plenty of Gas at a Price—Industry

By ALAN FORREST

Times Staff

There will be no gasoline shortage in British Columbia over the next five years.

But prices are definitely leading upward.

Oil companies say that British Columbians are sitting pretty in terms of supply of petroleum products, thanks to the proximity of Alberta's massive fields.

But a spokesman for Imperial Oil in Vancouver said: "Frequent price increases for petroleum products can be expected."

Other sources indicated that Victoria's gasoline price, currently 54 cents a gallon (52.9) for regular could be expected to go to 55 cents within days. At the current rate of increase it will be 60 cents a gallon this time next year.

Premium gasoline, currently 59 cents (58.9) is likely to go to 60 cents now and 65 cents within a year at the present rate of increase.

But there will be plenty of gasoline at higher prices, oil firms say.

British Columbia firms refine 1.5 million gallons per day, only a small increase from the 1.2 million gallons per day 10 years ago.

But the B.C. refineries serve a smaller geographic area than they did 10 years ago. The Okanagan and eastern B.C., once served by Vancouver-area refineries, are now largely handled by Alberta branches.

As long as refined gasoline continues to move into B.C. by tanker truck and train from Alberta, there will be no problem of supply — and oil companies see no economic reasons why the flow should not continue.

In addition there is a good supply of crude oil although wellhead prices are up.

British Columbia refines 128,000 barrels of crude oil per day — 4.5 million gallons.

Of this total, 60 per cent comes in the Trans Mountain Pipe Line from Alberta fields, the remainder from B.C.'s Peace River country.

Again there are no economic reasons why this flow should be interrupted.

Oil companies are concerned about the long-term effect of political considerations, however.

In particular the B.C. Energy Act, which could be used to control gasoline prices, could produce a shortage, the companies warn.

Crude oil and gasoline are sold in an unregulated market, which tends to keep prices similar all across the continent.

It is cheaper to continue to serve traditional customers as long as the prices are comparable. However, if B.C. prices are artificially depressed below continental levels, crude oil and gasoline supplies could be diverted to more profitable areas.

The companies argue they need price increases to be able to afford to pay the increased costs of obtaining oil.

They claim they are engaged in a high profit but high risk business and they get nervous when they are restricted by rules that do not apply to their competitors elsewhere in the world.

In addition, they talk a different language from politicians and this makes cooperation difficult.

The industry does not recognize provincial or national boundaries but rather is concerned about costs of transportation and distances to market.

The terms "Canada's needs" or "British Columbia's requirements" are foreign to oil company executives who are busy using words like "cents per barrel" and "transportation costs."

If it were cheaper to buy
